

CHAPTER III DOMESTIC CASE LAW ON FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

A. Introduction

1. In this report, the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights provides a synthesis of important rulings from the region's domestic high courts on the issue of freedom of expression in the Americas. This review is a continuation of the practice begun by the Office of the Special Rapporteur of documenting and disseminating, through its annual reports, the domestic court rulings that represent progress on a domestic level or that enrich regional scholarship and case law while at the same time incorporating inter-American standards on the issue into its reasoning.

2. As in other annual reports, this type of review seeks to contribute to a positive dialog between the bodies of the Inter-American system and domestic jurisdictions, with the conviction that the sharing of different experiences leads to a virtuous cycle of mutual learning.<sup>1</sup>

3. Effectively, the Court and the Inter-American Commission have repeatedly recognized that all domestic courts - regardless of level or hierarchy - play a crucial role in developing and implementing regional human rights standards. As the Court has found, local justice systems operate not only to guarantee the rights of individuals in specific cases, but also, through their rulings, they can broaden and strengthen the content of constitutional provisions and domestic laws connected with a particular right, thereby also strengthening the provisions of international instruments such as the American Convention. Likewise, the system's organs have emphasized that domestic judges play an important role in the process of implementing international human rights law in domestic legal systems.

4. For this reason, this Office continues to make its best efforts to document the court rulings that represent important local progress in the recognition and protection of the right to freedom of expression, and disseminate them in its annual reports, keeping that documentation updated and standardized. In some cases, these rulings must also be considered models to follow on the issue. This work also allows the Office of the Special Rapporteur to determine the degree to which the right is protected in the different countries of the region, as well as the characteristics of each level of protection. The results thus far have been notable. As this report demonstrates, there is a clear trend in important courts of the Americas toward a true guarantee and protection of the right to freedom of thought and expression of persons, meaning decisive steps toward the consolidation and preservation of pluralist and deliberative democratic systems.

5. This document is divided into two parts. The first part briefly explores the most relevant aspects of the inter-American legal framework on freedom of expression that have served as the basis for the selection of the judgments presented herein. For the purposes of this review, the determination that domestic progress has been made or a best practice has been established will be based on how well a judicial ruling measures up to the principles, scope and limits of the right to freedom of expression according to the interpretation of the authorized organs of the inter-American system and the highest standards set by the region's courts and tribunals.

6. The second part collects rulings from different countries throughout the region, organizing them thematically and summarizing them so as to make it easy to understand the way in which each ruling constitutes local progress or the way in which it implements regional standards.

---

<sup>1</sup> IACHR. Annual Report 2009. OEA/Ser.LV/II. Doc. 51. December 30, 2009. Annual Report of the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Chapter IV (The Right of Access to Information). Para. 93; Chapter V (National Incorporation of the Inter-American Standards on Freedom of Expression During 2009). Paras. 33-134. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/docs/reports/annual/Informe%20Annual%202009%20%20ENG.pdf>

7. Finally, as in other annual reports, the Office of the Special Rapporteur recognizes that an exhaustive review of the rulings made with regard to this right goes beyond the scope of this report. The Office of the Special Rapporteur will refer only to the emblematic court rulings on which it has received information.

B. Inter-American legal framework regarding freedom of expression

8. For the purposes of this report, domestic progress or the identification of best practices starts with the standards used to adopt the corresponding ruling and its impact on the greater exercise of freedom of thought and expression. In principle, these are rulings that at the very least reduce arbitrary or disproportionate limits on freedom of expression and contribute to strengthening guarantees of the existence of public and plural debate under democratic conditions, pursuant to the inter-American legal framework on the issue.

9. As this Office of the Special Rapporteur has expressed on prior occasions, the inter-American system for the protection of human rights is probably one of the systems that establishes the most guarantees for the exercise of freedom of thought and expression. Effectively, in its Article 13, the American Convention on Human Rights places a very high value on freedom of expression and establishes its own limited system of restrictions.<sup>2</sup> The same reinforced level of guarantee can be found in the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man - Article IV<sup>3</sup> - and the Inter-American Democratic Charter - Article 4.<sup>4</sup> This stricter level of guarantee is based on the broad concept of the autonomy and dignity of persons, which is based on the recognition of freedom of expression not only as

---

<sup>2</sup> The article holds that: "1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought and expression. This right includes freedom to seek, receive, and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing, in print, in the form of art, or through any other medium of one's choice. // 2. The exercise of the right provided for in the foregoing paragraph shall not be subject to prior censorship but shall be subject to subsequent imposition of liability, which shall be expressly established by law to the extent necessary to ensure: (a) respect for the rights or reputations of others; or (b) the protection of national security, public order, or public health or morals. // 3. The right of expression may not be restricted by indirect methods or means, such as the abuse of government or private controls over newsprint, radio broadcasting frequencies, or equipment used in the dissemination of information, or by any other means tending to impede the communication and circulation of ideas and opinions. // 4. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 2 above, public entertainments may be subject by law to prior censorship for the sole purpose of regulating access to them for the moral protection of childhood and adolescence. // 5. Any propaganda for war and any advocacy of national, racial, or religious hatred that constitute incitements to lawless violence or to any other similar action against any person or group of persons on any grounds including those of race, color, religion, language, or national origin shall be considered as offenses punishable by law."

<sup>3</sup> "Every person has the right to freedom of investigation, of opinion, and of the expression and dissemination of ideas, by any medium whatsoever." American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man. Article IV.

<sup>4</sup> "Transparency in government activities, probity, responsible public administration on the part of governments, respect for social rights, and freedom of expression and of the press are essential components of the exercise of democracy. // The constitutional subordination of all state institutions to the legally constituted civilian authority and respect for the rule of law on the part of all institutions and sectors of society are equally essential to democracy." Inter-American Democratic Charter, Article 4.

a right derived from the idea of human autonomy, but also as a right with instrumental value for the exercise of other fundamental rights and with an essential role in democratic systems.

10. On this latter aspect, the IACHR and the Inter-American Court have highlighted in their case law that there is a structural relationship between democracy and the right to freedom of thought and expression. This relationship is so important that the organs of the system have emphasized that the objective itself of Article 13 of the American Convention is to strengthen the functioning of pluralist and deliberative democratic systems by protecting and fomenting the free circulation of information, ideas, and expression of all kinds.

11. This relationship between the right to freedom of expression and democracy - defined as "strict" and "indissoluble" - is partly explained by the dual dimensions of this right. Effectively, and as the Inter-American Court and the IACHR have indicated, freedom of expression has an individual component consisting of each person's right to express his or her own thoughts, ideas and information, as well as a collective or social aspect, consisting of every person's right to seek and receive any information (information and ideas of all kinds), to know outside thoughts, ideas, and information, and to be well informed.<sup>5</sup>

12. Taking this dual dimension into account, inter-American case law has found that freedom of expression is a means for the exchange of information and ideas among people and for mass communication among human beings. It has specified that for the common citizen, the knowledge of others' opinions or the information available to other people is just as important as the right to disseminate one's own beliefs or information. The case law has also emphasized that a particular act of expression has both dimensions simultaneously. For this reason, a limitation of the right to freedom of expression at the same time affects the right of the person wishing to disseminate an idea or information and the right of members of society to learn about that idea or information. Additionally, the right to information and to receive the greatest number of opinions and variety of information requires a special effort for achieving access to the public debate under equal conditions and without discrimination of any kind. This presupposes special conditions for inclusion that allow for the effective exercise of this right for all sectors of society.<sup>6</sup>

13. A large portion of the development of the subject in scholarship and in the case law of the system's bodies highlights the importance assigned to the dual dimension of the right to freedom of expression and its role in democracy. Specifically, based on this relationship between democracy and freedom of expression, the Court and the Inter-American Commission have in recent years defined a general framework regarding the principles and standards linked to the interpretation and application of Article 13 of the Convention - and IV of the American Declaration - that places emphasis on the special protection of speech regarding the public interest or State officials and the conditions under which legitimate limitations to this right may be established in such cases.

14. This general framework promotes the recognition of at least the following principles: 1) all forms of expression, regardless of content and level of acceptance by society at large or the State, are presumed generally to be covered; 2) expression having to do with matters of public interest and individuals who are holding or seeking to hold government positions, and expression that includes elements constitutive of the personal identity or dignity of the person who makes the expression enjoy greater protection under the American Convention, and the State must therefore refrain to a greater degree from imposing limitations on these forms of expression; 3) to be admissible, the limitations must be established through subsequent liability for exercising the right, with prior restraint (censorship) and restrictions that have discriminatory effects and that are imposed through indirect mechanisms, such as the ones proscribed in Article 13(3) of the American Convention, being prohibited; 4) the examination of the legitimacy of the limitations imposed requires that the restrictions be established clearly and precisely by law, that they be aimed at achieving legitimate objectives recognized by the Convention, and that they be necessary in a democratic society (three-part test); and 5) the standard requires that due to the type of speech to which they apply or the medium they employ, some types of limitations must be exceptional and subjected to an examination that is stricter and more demanding in order to be valid under the American Convention (strict necessity test).

---

<sup>5</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, A Hemispheric Agenda for the Defense of Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II/CIDH/RELE/INF.4/09. February 25, 2009, para. 15. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonHemispheric%20%20Agenda%20Eng%20FINAL%20portada.pdf>

<sup>6</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, A Hemispheric Agenda for the Defense of Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II/CIDH/RELE/INF.4/09. February 25, 2009, para. 15. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonHemispheric%20%20Agenda%20Eng%20FINAL%20portada.pdf>

15. The judgments reviewed herein show the way in which different domestic courts have incorporated regional standards into their domestic legal systems. Likewise, some of the rulings mentioned in this report have been pioneer in making fundamental progress on the issue of freedom of expression and have become required points of reference not only for the courts and tribunals of other States but also for the bodies of the regional system itself. Effectively, it has been possible thanks to some of the rulings noted hereinafter to promote freedom of thought and expression and strengthen inter-American scholarship and case law.

C. Judicial rulings on the subject of freedom of expression

16. Hereinafter, we will present some of the most significant decisions that in the opinion of the Office of the Special Rapporteur constitute important domestic progress or best practices on the subject of freedom of expression. They are organized according to the main standard or rule of the right that they develop. The initial sections contain extracts from some of the rulings that address generally the scope and characteristics of the right to freedom of expression. These are included here for their relevance in the later analysis of the legitimacy of limitations to the right, a central aspect of the rulings reviewed.

1. Case law on the importance, scope and function of freedom of expression in democratic systems

17. In decisions that have clearly been in harmony with the organs of the inter-American human rights system, the highest courts in the region have generally recognized the importance and special character of the right to freedom of thought and expression in the context of their constitutional legal systems. The priority given to this right has been attributed to the instrumental role it plays in democratic systems and to it being an indispensable tool for the exercise of other rights. As this aspect has been broadly developed by a variety of courts, in this section the Office of the Special Rapporteur will highlight some of the relevant court rulings that have been emblematic on this issue.

18. In a judgment dated February 1, 2006,<sup>7</sup> the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala indicated in a ruling on the constitutionality of the articles of the Penal Code that establish the crime of desacato<sup>8</sup> that freedom of expression is “a fundamental right inherent to persons [...] and one of the liberties that are a positive sign of true constitutional rule of law [...]” In this sense, it explained that “the free expression of thought is one of the rights that make respect for the dignity of a person possible by allowing a person to freely translate his or her ideas and thoughts into expression that can give rise to value judgments and subsequent decision-making, not only of individuals but also of groups, within a democratic society.” In the opinion of this high court, this is “how one explains that in modern constitutional history, the exercise of this right has deserved constitutional protection.”

19. In this important ruling, the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala turns to what was established by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in Advisory Opinion OC/5 and the Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression where they determine that “the right to and respect for freedom of expression is established as an instrument that allows for the free exchange of ideas and functions to strengthen democratic processes, while at the same time guaranteeing the citizenry a basic tool for participation.” This criteria was reiterated by the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala in a ruling dated September 14, 2010.<sup>9</sup> Citing comparative law, the Court recalled that the deep commitment to the freedom of expression of all persons and the need to protect robust, open and uninhibited debate on subjects of public interest require the State to tolerate attacks even when they seem or in fact are harsh, caustic or unpleasant.

---

<sup>7</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Partial Judgment of General Unconstitutionality, Case File 1122-2005, February 1, 2006. Available at: http://www.cc.gob.gt/siged2009/mdlWeb/fmConsultaWebVerDocumento.aspx?St\_DocumentId=807270.html

<sup>8</sup> The judgment examined the constitutionality of articles 411, 412 and 413 of the Penal Code of Guatemala regulating the crimes of desacato against presidents of State bodies (art. 411), desacato against authority (art. 412) and evidence for leveling accusations of these crimes (art. 413).

20. The Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Costa Rica ruled similarly in a judgment dated March 29, 2011<sup>10</sup>. Therein, it ruled on an amparo remedy brought against an agreement reached by the University Council of the Universidad de Costa Rica preventing a foreign guest from giving a conference there because in the past he had made statements that were discriminatory against a variety of minorities. In its ruling, the Chamber expressed that:

“It should also be taken into account that freedom of expression is an indispensable requirement for democracy - although certainly not the only one - as it allows for the creation of public opinion, essential for giving content to a number of principles of the constitutional rule of law, such as for example the right to information, the right to petition and rights having to do with political participation. The opportunity for all people to participate in public debate constitutes a necessary condition for the construction of a social dynamic of exchange of knowledge, ideas and information that allows for the reaching of consensus and taking of decisions among components of diverse social groups; but it also constitutes a channel for the expression of dissenting opinions, which in a democracy are just as necessary as concurring opinions. For its part, the exchange of opinions and information that arises from public debate contributes to forming personal opinions, while both combined form public opinion, which ends up being expressed through the channels of representative democracy.”

21. This relationship between democracy and freedom of expression has also been recognized by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation of Mexico in a number of rulings. That court has found that freedom of expression is a right that is “functionally essential in the structure of the constitutional rule of law”<sup>11</sup> and that in its “public, collective and institutional aspects” it becomes the “centerpiece for the proper functioning of representative democracy.”<sup>12</sup>

22. For its part, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Argentine Nation issued a ruling on June 24, 2008, in the case of Patitó, José Ángel et al. v. Newspaper La Nación et al.<sup>13</sup> that emphasized that “with regard to freedom of expression, this Court has repeatedly ruled that it holds an eminent place in a republican regime. In this sense, the Court has held for some time that [...] among the liberties that the

---

<sup>9</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Judgment on Appeal of Amparo Judgment, Case File 4628-2009, September 14, 2010. Available at: http://www.cc.gob.gt/siged2009/mdlWeb/frmConsultaWebVerDocumento.aspx?St\_DocumentoId=815146.html. This ruling of the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala overturned a ruling convicting a candidate for representative elections with the Professional Association of Veterinary Doctors and Zoologists before the Superior University Council of Guatemala of lacking “professional ethics” and “respect for one of its members, both in speech and in writing,” after he criticized the quality of the education provided at one of the universities in that country during his campaign. Basing its ruling on the importance and function of the right to freedom of expression in democratic proceedings, the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala ordered that a new ruling be issued based on the court’s case law on the subject.

<sup>10</sup> Republic of Costa Rica. Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Amparo Remedy Res. No. 2011004160, March 29, 2011. Available at: <http://sitios.poder-judicial.go.cr/salaconstitucional/Constitucion%20Politica/Judgmenton2011/11-004160.html>

<sup>11</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Direct Amparo Appeal 2044-2008, June 17, 2009. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/08020440.010.doc>

<sup>12</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Direct Amparo Appeal 2044-2008, June 17, 2009. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/08020440.010.doc>

<sup>13</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of June 24, 2008, P.2297.XL, Patitó, José Ángel et al. v. Diario La Nación et al. Available at: <http://www.cpi.org/newon2008/americonaArgentina.Court.24-06-08.pdf>

National Constitution enshrines, freedom of the press is one of the most important, to the point that without its due protection, the democracy that exists would be an impaired one and democracy in name only [...].”

23. Analogously, the Constitutional Tribunal of Bolivia ruled in a judgment dated September 20, 2012,<sup>14</sup> that Article 162 of the Penal Code was unconstitutional. That article established harsher prison sentences for those convicted of defamation [calumnia, injuria o difamación] against a public official (desacato). The court explained that freedom of expression is an essential human right that holds a “preferential position” in the constitutional system due to the role it plays in a democratic system. Taking up once again one of its previous rulings, it indicated that freedom of expression “constitutes one of the most important rights of an individual and one of the fundamental pillars of all democratic States,” and that “the State duty to respect and guarantee fundamental principles in a democratic society includes the obligation to promote open and plural public debate.”

24. In a judgment dated April 30, 2009,<sup>15</sup> the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil declared that the Press Act, which was passed during the military regime, established harsh punishment for journalists for the crime of defamation [difamación y injurias], allowed for prior restraint and established other measures that restricted the exercise of freedom of expression, and was therefore not compatible with the Federal Constitution. To this effect, the Tribunal carried out an extensive examination of the scope and importance of freedom of expression in a democratic system, referencing among other sources the inter-American system’s standards on the subject.

25. The Tribunal found that freedom of the press is an expression of the freedoms of thought, information and expression with an intrinsic relationship to democracy, and that therefore it must enjoy extra protection to ensure it can be exercised fully. In this regard, the Supreme Tribunal highlighted that the press is a natural opportunity for the formation of public opinion and an alternative to the official version of the facts. In that sense, critical thought in journalism is an integral part of full and trustworthy information. This standard was reiterated by the Tribunal in a judgment dated September 2, 2010.<sup>16</sup>

26. The Constitutional Court of Colombia has repeatedly established in multiple rulings the priority status of the right to freedom of expression in the constitutional framework of that country.<sup>17</sup> So for example, in recent ruling C-422/11 of May 25, 2011<sup>18</sup>, the Court ruled that judges who hear cases on defamation [injurias y calumnias] must interpret those criminal offenses restrictively in ways that favors “the expanding scope of freedom of expression.” In this ruling, the Court reiterated the thesis that it has

---

<sup>14</sup> Plurinational State of Bolivia. Constitutional Tribunal. Specific Action of Unconstitutionality, Case File 00130-2012-01-AIC, Judgment 1250/2012, September 20, 2012. Available at: http://www.tribunalconstitucional.gob.bo/moduleonver\_resolucion/indexnew.php?id=125150

<sup>15</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Complaint of breach of fundamental precept 130 Federal District. April 30, 2009. Available at: <http://www.stf.jus.br/portal/inteiroTeor/obterInteiroTeor.asp?id=605411&idDocumento=&codigoClasse=776&numero=13>

<sup>16</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Sentence of September 2, 2010. Precautionary measure in Direct Action of Unconstitutionality ADI-4451. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=TP&docID=2613221> In this ruling, the Supreme Federal Tribunal recognized that the press has a “relationship that is rooted in interdependence or feedback.” In this sense, it explained that the Brazilian constitution grants the press the right to monitor and disclose matters related to the life of the State and society, which is why renouncing press freedom would be equivalent to renouncing general information about matters related to authorities, whether they be political, economic, military or religious.

<sup>17</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-010/00, of January 19, 2000. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2000/C-010-00.htm>; Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>; Constitutional Court. Judgment C-442-11, of May 25, 2011. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2011/C-442-11.htm>

<sup>18</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-442-11 of May 25, 2011. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2011/C-442-11.htm>

held since its beginning - and that is based on “the special importance of this right in the Colombian legal system - [...] that the right occupies a place of privilege within the catalog of fundamental rights.”

27. Prior to this, in ruling T-391/07 of May 22, 2007<sup>19</sup>, regarding a writ of protection brought by Radio Cadena Nacional (RCN) against the Council of State, the Constitutional Court of Colombia indicated that “the principal justification for making freedom of expression central to contemporary constitutional systems is that, through its protection, representative democracy, citizen participation and self governance are facilitated in each nation. This argument highlights that communication and the free flow of information, opinions and ideas in a society are essential elements for democratic and representative governance, for which reason freedom of expression, on allowing open and vigorous debate on public matters, serves a central political function.”

28. Of particular interest are the considerations developed by the Constitutional Court of Colombia in this ruling with regard to the way this right specifically functions in its political dimension. For this Court:

“In its political dimension, freedom of expression serves a number of specific functions: (i) the broad and open political debate protected by this freedom informs and improves on the quality of public policy in that it permits “the inclusion of all sectors of society in the communication, decision making and development processes,” inclusion that “is fundamental for their needs, opinions, and interests to be taken into account in the design of policies and decision making,” thus allowing equitable exercise of the right to participation; (ii) freedom of expression keeps the channels for political change open, using critical analysis to prevent those that govern from becoming indefinitely rooted in an illegitimate position; (iii) solid protection of the free communication of information and ideas prevents governmental abuses of power by supplying a counterweight through the opening of a channel for the exercise of the power of citizen participation and oversight of the public - in other words, it provides an opportunity for the discussion of matters in the general interest, an opportunity that in turn reduces the risk of government oppression; (iv) it promotes sociopolitical stability on providing an escape valve for social dissent and thereby establishing a framework for managing and processing conflicts that does not threaten to erode societal integrity; (v) it protects active political minorities at a given time, preventing them from being silenced by majority or prevailing forces; and (vi) on a more basic level, it is a necessary condition for ensuring the free expression of the opinions of voters when they cast their ballots for a political representative. It has also been noted that freedom of expression (vii) contributes to the formation of public opinion on political matters and the consolidation of a duly informed electorate, given that it gives substance to citizens’ right to understand political matters, thereby allowing them to participate effectively in the operation of democracy, thereby (viii) bringing to life the principle of representative self-government by citizens themselves, and (vii) the responsibility of those governing the electorate, as well as (ix) the principle of political equality. Finally, it has been emphasized that (x) freedom of expression strengthens the individual autonomy of the political subject in a democratic regime, and that (xi) on allowing the construction of opinion, it facilitates societal control over the operation not only of the political system, but also of society itself, including the legal system and its need to develop or change.”<sup>20</sup>

29. As will be explained later on, according to this Tribunal, “the multiplicity of reasons that justifies granting generic freedom of expression a privileged position in the Colombian constitutional system has an immediate practical consequence: there is a constitutional presumption in favor of freedom of expression.”<sup>21</sup>

2. Case law on the scope and entitlement of freedom of expression

30. In the terms of Article 13 of the American Convention, freedom of expression is a right held by every individual, without discrimination of any kind. According to Principle 2 of the Declaration of Principles, “all people should be afforded equal opportunities to receive, seek and impart information by any means of communication without any discrimination for reasons of race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinions, national or social origin, economic status, birth or any other social condition.”

<sup>19</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

<sup>20</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

<sup>21</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

31. As the Inter-American Court has indicated, the conditions for bearing the right to freedom of expression cannot be restricted to a particular profession or group of individuals, nor to the scope of freedom of the press: the “American Convention guarantees this right to every individual, irrespective of any other consideration; so, such guarantee should not be limited to a given profession or group of individuals. Freedom of expression is an essential element of the freedom of the press, although they are not synonymous and exercise of the first does not condition exercise of the second.”<sup>22</sup>

32. Likewise, the Commission and the Inter-American Court have emphasized the Democratic scope of freedom of expression, which implies both the ability of every individual to put forward expression and ideas, as well as the ability to seek, receive and disseminate information of all kinds, orally, in print, in the mass media, or through any other medium of an individual's choosing. In this sense, the organs of the system have recognized that Article 13 of the American Convention includes:<sup>23</sup> 1) the right to speak - that is, to express orally thoughts, ideas, information or opinions;<sup>24</sup> 2) the right to speak necessarily implies individuals' right to use the language of their choosing to express themselves;<sup>25</sup> 3) the right to write - that is, to express thoughts, ideas, information or opinions in writing or in print; 4) the right to disseminate spoken or written expression of thoughts, information, ideas or opinions through the medium chosen for communicating to the largest number of receptors possible;<sup>26</sup> 5) the right to artistic or symbolic expression, to the distribution of artistic expression, and to access to art in all its forms;<sup>27</sup> 6) the right to seek, receive and access expressions, ideas, opinions and information of all kinds; 7) the right to have access to information about oneself contained in public or private databases or registries, with the correlative right to update, correct or amend it; and 8) the right to possess information in writing or any other form, to transport that information, and to distribute it.<sup>28</sup>

33. All of the rulings collected in this report begin with the assumption that the right to freedom of expression universal, something that is generally recognized in the constitutions of the countries of the region. Thus for example, the Constitutional Court of Colombia in the aforementioned

---

<sup>22</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Tristán Donoso v. Panama. Preliminary Objections, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 27, 2009. Series C No. 193. para. 114.

<sup>23</sup> See IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.LV/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Paras. 21-29. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doc/publication/INTER-AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf>

<sup>24</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of López Álvarez v. Honduras. Judgment of February 1, 2006. Series C No. 141, para. 164; Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment dated July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107, para. 109; Case of Ricardo Canese v. Paraguay. Judgment of August 31, 2004. Series C No. 111, para. 78; Case of Ivcher Bronstein v. Peru. Judgment of February 6, 2001. Series C No. 74, para. 147; Case of "The Last Temptation of Christ" (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Judgment dated February 5, 2001. Series C No. 73, para. 65; Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism (arts. 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights). Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985. Series A No. 5, para. 31.

<sup>25</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of López Álvarez v. Honduras. Judgment of February 1, 2006. Series C No. 141, para. 164.

<sup>26</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Palamara Iribarne v. Chile. Judgment of November 22, 2005. Series C No. 135, para. 73; Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment of July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107, para. 109; Case of Ricardo Canese v. Paraguay. Judgment of August 31, 2004. Series C No. 111, para. 78; Case of Ivcher Bronstein v. Peru. Judgment of February 6, 2001. Series C No. 74, para. 147; Case of "The Last Temptation of Christ" (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Judgment dated February 5, 2001. Series C No. 73, para. 65; Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism (arts. 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights). Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985. Series A No. 5, para. 31.

<sup>27</sup> IACHR. Pleadings before the Inter-American Court in the Case of "The Last Temptation of Christ" (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Transcripts available at: I/A Court H.R. Case of "The Last Temptation of Christ" (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Judgment dated February 5, 2001. Series C No. 73, para. 61(b).

<sup>28</sup> IACHR. Report No. 3/98. Case No. 11.221. Tarcisio Medina Charry. Colombia. April 7, 1998, para. 77.

judgment T-391/07 of May 22, 2007,<sup>29</sup> found that all individuals are entitled to the right to freedom of expression, without any discrimination regarding the characteristics of the individual, the content of the speech, or the way in which the speech is received or distributed.

34. On this last point, it expressed that the media, as vehicles for the full exercise of the right to freedom of expression, must be recognized as bearers of this right. In this regard, it would be appropriate to mention that the Constitutional Court has recognized that the right to open a media outlet is a fundamental right that must be recognized universally and without discrimination, and with restrictions that are strictly necessary with regard to certain types of media that wish to use the electromagnetic spectrum.<sup>30</sup>

35. The scope of the right to freedom of expression in the rulings reviewed in this report is likewise broad. Although the majority of the rulings examined refer to expression through the mass and print media, the courts recognize that the right to freedom of expression likewise protects multiple other forms of expression, artistic expression among them. This has been established by, for example, the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil, in a judgment issued on August 1, 2011, in which it examined the constitutionality of the requirement that the country's musicians be part of a professional organization<sup>31</sup>.

3. Case law on the presumption of ab initio coverage for all kinds of expression, including offensive, shocking or disturbing speech

36. The organs of the inter-American system have explained that in principle, all forms of speech are protected by the right to freedom of expression regardless of their content or the degree to which they are accepted by society or the State. This Office of the Special Rapporteur has emphasized that this general assumption that all expression is covered is explained through the State's obligation to remain neutral toward content and by the resulting need to guarantee that, in principle, no individuals, groups, ideas or means of expression are excluded a priori from the public debate.<sup>32</sup>

37. According to this order of ideas, the Inter-American Court has reiterated that freedom of expression must be guaranteed not only with regard to the distribution of ideas and information favorably received or considered inoffensive or indifferent, but also with regard to those that offend and shock.<sup>33</sup> These are the demands of pluralism, tolerance and the spirit of disclosure without which a truly democratic society could not exist.

38. In the last decade, domestic courts have taken significant steps toward protecting this kind of expression, preserving the significant value that it has for democratic societies. For example, according to a judgment dated September 2, 2010, for the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil, freedom of

---

<sup>29</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

<sup>30</sup> Cf., e.g., Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Unification Judgment SU-182 of 1998. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/1998/SU182-98.htm>

<sup>31</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Extraordinary remedy 414.426 Santa Catarina. Judgment of August 1, 2011. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=AC&docID=628395>. In the same sense, judgment T-081 of the Constitutional Court of Colombia, among other considerations, mentioned previously that freedom of expression protects multiple forms of expression, among them artistic expression. In its ruling, the Court found that granting a public servant the authority to classify a work of art as indecent violated the right to freedom of expression. Cf. Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-081 of February 26, 1993. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/1993/T-081-93.htm>

<sup>32</sup> IACHR. Annual Report 2009. OEA/Ser.L/V/II. Doc. 51. December 30, 2009. Annual Report of the Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Chapter IV (The Right of Access to Information), para. 31. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/docs/reports/annual/Informe%20Anual%202009%20%20ENG.pdf>

<sup>33</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment of July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107, para. 113; Case of "The Last Temptation of Christ" (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Judgment dated February 5, 2001. Series C No. 73, para. 69; Case of Ríos et al. v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exceptions, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 28, 2009. Series C No. 194, para.105; Case of Perozo et al. v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exceptions, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 28, 2009. Series C No. 195, para 116.

expression guarantees the right of a journalist - the same as any other person - to express his or her ideas "including with a tough, blunt, sarcastic, ironic or irreverent tone, especially against State authorities and bodies."<sup>34</sup> The Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina also used this criteria in a recent judgment dated October 30, 2012, handed down in the case of Quantín, Norberto Julio v. Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al. on derechos personalísimos<sup>35</sup>. In that ruling, the Argentine Supreme Court took up the case law of the European Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Court on the subject and recalled that "journalistic freedom includes the opportunity to use a certain degree of exaggeration, to the point of provocation." On ruling in this specific case, it found that "toleration of these excesses are better for democracy than the other alternative," which would be turning judges into the arbiters of societal debate. For this high court, "in addition to the fact that this role would be inappropriate for the courts, it would dangerously restrict the freedom of public debate."

39. The Permanent Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Peru ruled similarly in a judgment dated June 18, 2010.<sup>36</sup> The court was ruling on a lawsuit seeking the nullification of a prison sentence for the crime of defamation handed down to the director of a weekly newspaper with local circulation. In the ruling, the Chamber recognized that "harsh and caustic criticism or attacks that are sharp and unpleasant [are] necessarily tolerable in order to secure freedom of opinion and guarantee public debate on matters of local interest in the administration of State institutions." According to the Chamber, in cases in which public and societal interest is in play, "the context in which the expressions being questioned were issued must be taken into account." In this sense, it emphasized that "the tone and content of the statements that are tolerable as part of the exercise of freedom of expression are related to the degree to which the news item awakes general or societal interest."

40. The rulings of the Constitutional Court of Colombia have had a similar tone. In judgment C-010/00,<sup>37</sup> this high court explained that "as international case law on human rights has highlighted, freedom of expression seeks to protect not only the dissemination of information or opinions that the State and the majority of the population consider inoffensive or indifferent, but also ideas or information that are not viewed favorably by a majority in society and that may be judged disturbing or dangerous. Pluralism, tolerance and the spirit of disclosure, without which a truly democratic society does not exist, require that these dissident opinions and information also be protected". In this line of reasoning, it expressed that the constitutional assumption of coverage of freedom of expression in principle covers all forms of human expression, and that constitutional freedom protects both the content and the tone of expression.<sup>38</sup>

41. Another case relevant for the application of the fundamentals of this principle can be found in the April 23, 2009, ruling Patricia Mujica Silva v. Liceo Experimental Artístico y de Aplicación de

---

<sup>34</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Judgment of September 2, 2010. Precautionary Measure in Direct Action of Unconstitutionality ADI-4451. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=TP&docID=2613221>

<sup>35</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of October 30, 2012, Quantín, Norberto Julio v. Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al. on derechos personalísimos. Available at: <http://www.csjn.gov.ar/confal/ConsultaCompletaFallos.do?method=verDocumentos&id=693527>

<sup>36</sup> Republic of Peru. Permanent Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of June 18, 2010. RN No. 1372/2010. Available at: <http://www.pj.gob.pe/wponwcm/connect/fdec1e004bf42509a767b73aa702a2d1/SPP+R.N.+N%C2%BA+1372-2010+-+Amazonas.pdf?MOD=AJPERES&CACHEID=fdec1e004bf42509a767b73aa702a2d1>

<sup>37</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-010/00, of January 19, 2000. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2000/C-010-00.htm>. See also, Constitutional Court. Judgment C-417/09, of June 26, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/C-417-09.htm>

<sup>38</sup> See also, Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-417/09, of June 26, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/C-417-09.htm>

Antofagasta República Juan Rojas Navarro,<sup>39</sup> whereby the Supreme Court of Justice of Chile found that the decision made by public school authorities to expel one of its students “for holding ideas that they saw as contrary to the values that the entity professed” was arbitrary and violated the constitutional guarantee of freedom of expression. In its analysis of the specific case, the high court found that the decision was based solely on disagreement with positions held by the student. In this regard, it ruled that “although it is evident that the student proposed that fellow students take political action and strongly criticized the legal regime of the education system and his school [...] the action being appealed violates freedom of expression [...] because it punishes legitimate communication of ideas.”

42. Finally, on explaining the reasoning for which the University of Costa Rica must foster a broad opening to the expression of all types of speech, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of that country held in a decision dated March 29, 2011,<sup>40</sup> that “suspending a conference because the presenter had expressed a series of controversial ideas prevents both public discussion on those subjects and the formation of public opinion. Further, the expression of the ideas of the presenter could allow those who disagree with him to further refine their convictions, or allow those who agree with him to change their opinions on hearing the public debate, or just the opposite. However, this is how a democracy is built: through dissent and consensus.”

4. Case law on specially protected speech

43. The Office of the Special Rapporteur has held that although all forms of expression are in principle protected by the right enshrined in Article 13 of the American Convention, certain types of speech receive special protection due to their importance for the exercise of other human rights or for the consolidation, functioning and preservation of democracy.

44. Effectively, inter-American case law has repeatedly recognized that the functioning of democracy requires the greatest possible level of public discourse on the functioning of society and the State in all its aspects - that is, on matters of public interest. In a democratic and pluralist system, the actions and omissions of the State and its officials must be subjected to rigorous scrutiny, not only by internal oversight bodies, but also by the press and public opinion. Public administration and matters of common interest must be subjected to oversight by society as a whole. Democratic oversight of public administration through public opinion increases transparency in State activities and causes public officials to take responsibility for their actions. It is also a measure for achieving the highest degree of citizen participation.

45. According to the case law developed in recent years by the bodies of the inter-American system, a democratic and pluralist system must tend toward greater and broader circulation of information, opinions and ideas relating to the State, matters of public interest, public officials performing their duties or candidates to public positions, or private individuals voluntarily involved in public matters, as well as speech and political debate, leaving little space for State restriction of information, opinions and ideas.<sup>41</sup> In this regard, Principle 11 of the Declaration of Principles states that, “[p]ublic officials are subject to greater scrutiny by society.”

---

<sup>39</sup> Republic of Chile. Supreme Court of Justice. Patricia Mujica Silva con Liceo Experimental Artístico y of Aplicación of Antofagasta República Juan Rojas Navarro (2009). Judgment of April 23, 2009, Rol N°1.740-2009. Available at: http://www.poderjudicial.cl/juris\_pjud/muestra\_doc.php?docid=49718&row\_id=&ciudad\_palabras=&rol\_buscar=1.740?2009:1.740?09:1740?2009:1740?09&todos\_ministros=&sala\_buscar=&flag\_ninguna=0

<sup>40</sup> Republic of Costa Rica. Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Amparo Remedy Res. N° 2011004160, of March 29, 2011. Available at: <http://sitios.poderjudicial.go.cr/salaconstitucional/Constitucion%20Politica/Judgmenton2011/11-004160.html>

<sup>41</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Kimel v. Argentina. Judgment of May 2, 2008. Series C No. 177, para. 88; Case of “The Last Temptation of Christ” (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Judgment of February 5, 2001, Series C No. 73, para. 69; Case of Ivcher Bronstein v. Peru. Judgment of February 6, 2001. Series C No. 74, para. 152; Case of Ricardo Canese v. Paraguay. Judgment of August 31, 2004. Series C No. 111, para. 83.

46. In clear harmony with this development, the region's courts have handed down important decisions in the last decade that provide special guarantees for this type of speech with regard to illegitimate limitations, in particular limitations oriented toward protecting the honor and reputation of public officials. For example, in the previously cited September 20, 2012, judgment of the Plurinational Constitutional Tribunal of Bolivia in which it ruled crimes of desacato unconstitutional, it stated that "due to the very nature of the work they do - work in the public interest - authorities are exposed to a variety of criticism. Thus, in the case of Herrera Ulloa [v.] Costa Rica (2004), the Inter-American Court of Human Rights recalled that: "[t]hose individuals who have an influence on matters of public interest have laid themselves open voluntarily to a more intense public scrutiny and, consequently, in this domain, they are subject to a higher risk of being criticized, because their activities go beyond the private sphere and belong to the realm of public debate".<sup>42</sup>

47. According the Constitutional Court of Guatemala, Principle 11 the Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression "reveals that due to the performance of the function that falls to them, public officials are subject to greater scrutiny by society, therefore laws that penalize offensive expression directed at public officials are in violation of the right to freedom of expression and the right to information." For this high court, a democratic system needs critical expression "to encourage the corresponding scrutiny of the public function. Prohibiting this type of speech is inappropriate in a system [...] that delegates the exercise of sovereignty that belongs to the people. Therefore, those who make up this latter element of the State must be permitted the right to criticize official conduct, especially the conduct of those who serve in the three bodies which have been delegated with the power to govern, particularly if that conduct exceeds limits established in the Constitution and by law".<sup>43</sup>

48. In judgment T-298/09 of April 23, 2009,<sup>44</sup> the Constitutional Court of Colombia, citing once more its settled case law on the subject, indicated that "on issues of clear relevance to the public in which a public servant is involved, the right to freedom of expression and information becomes broader and less flexible. Effectively, as already indicated, when a person has voluntarily decided to become a public personality or when he or she has the power to in some way exercise State authority, that person has the duty to bear up under greater criticism and questioning than a common person who holds no public authority and who has not decided to submit him or herself to public scrutiny." In further development in judgment C-442-11 of May 25, 2011,<sup>45</sup> the Court indicated that "political speech, debate on matters of public interest, and speech that constitutes a direct and immediate exercise of additional fundamental rights that must necessarily be connected to freedom of expression in order to be exercised, all enjoy a greater degree of protection". This reinforced protection "has a direct effect on admissible State regulation, and the standard of constitutional oversight to which the limitations [on these types of expressions] are subjected."

---

<sup>42</sup> Plurinational State of Bolivia. Constitutional Tribunal. Action of Unconstitutionality, Case File 00130-2012-01-AIC Judgment 1250/2012 of September 20, 2012. Available at: http://www.tribunalconstitucional.gob.bo/moduleonver\_resolucion/indexnew.php?id=125150

<sup>43</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Judgment of General Partial Unconstitutionality, Case File 1122-2005, of February 1, 2006. Available at: http://www.cc.gob.gt/siged2009/mdlWeb/fmConsultaWebVerDocumento.aspx?St\_DocumentoId=807270.html

<sup>44</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-298/09, of April 23, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/T-298-09.htm>

<sup>45</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-442-11, of May 25, 2011. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2011/C-442-11.htm> In this judgment, the court declared that judges who hear cases involving defamation [injurias y calumnias] should interpret the relevant criminal norms strictly in order to favor "an expansive concept of freedom of expression."

49. In similar terms, in a judgment dated November 23, 2011,<sup>46</sup> the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil ruled in a case of a direct action of unconstitutionality on the interpretation of Article 33(2) of Law No. 11.343 of 2006, which criminalizes drug consumption. The Tribunal found that the law should not include anything that could allow for a ban on demonstrations and public debate on the legalization or decriminalization of drug consumption. The Court explained that criticism of crime policy, being as it is a matter in the public interest, is specially protected by the right to freedom of expression. The high court recalled that “the collectivization of critical thought and the right to criticize institutions, persons and institutes must be fomented as expression of the citizenry and as a way of seeking out the truth or essence of things.” Finally, it emphasized that “criminalization of conduct cannot be confused with discussion about its criminalization [...] Otherwise, it would not be compatible with the dynamism and diversity - both cultural and political (pluralism) - of the democratic society in which we live, where freedom of expression is the best expression of freedom.”

50. Following this reasoning, in a ruling dated June 24, 2008,<sup>47</sup> the Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina found that “one of this Court’s functions is to support, contribute to and protect the basic consensuses for the functioning of a society in which different opinions can coexist together in tolerance. One of these fundamental principles is that of freedom of expression and oversight of public officials, as well as discussion of their decisions.” In that sense, the Court emphasized that “there can be no liability for criticism or dissent, even when expressed heatedly, as every plural and diverse society needs democratic debate nurtured with opinions whose goal is social peace.” The same tone is found in a recent ruling by the Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina dated October 30, 2012.<sup>48</sup> In Quantín, Norberto Julio v. Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al. on derechos personalísimos, following what has been established by the Inter-American Court, the Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina found that expression regarding a person’s suitability for holding a public office enjoys greater constitutional protection.

51. Likewise, in a ruling dated June 18, 2012,<sup>49</sup> the 33rd Criminal Court of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima explicitly adopted the case law and scholarship of the organs of the inter-American system regarding broad debate in matters of public interest and greater scrutiny in speech about public officials, as well as the narrower space for restrictions in these areas. In this regard, it recognized the case law of the Inter-American Court of Human rights in the sense that there should be less opportunity for restrictions to political debate or debate on questions of public interest, and that in the terms of Article 13 of the American Convention, opportunity for restrictions on expression concerning public officials or other persons exercising functions of a public nature must be particularly narrow. Regarding this latter issue, it reiterated that “those persons who have an influence on issues in the public interest are exposed to greater scrutiny, and are consequently at greater risk of criticism.”

52. In analyzing the case in question, the Court found that “honor with regard to individuals who have exercised a public function and are public personalities [as in the case of complainant] are based on the legal status they assume.” For the Court, “on having been a State minister and member of the Congress of the Republic, a greater opportunity for criticism is required, [which] does not mean that he does not have honor, but rather that he does but in a more limited sense due to the function he has taken up.”

53. The 17th Criminal Circuit Court of the First Circuit in Panama ruled likewise in judgment No. 13 of July 17, 2012,<sup>50</sup> whereby it acquitted three journalists that had been charged with the crime of

---

<sup>46</sup> Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil. Judgment of November 23, 2011. Direct action of unconstitutionality 4274. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=TP&docID=1955301>

<sup>47</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of June 24, 2008, P.2297.XL, Patitó, José Ángel et al. v. Diario La Nación et al.. Available at: <http://www.cpj.org/newon2008/americonArgentina.Court.24-06-08.pdf>

<sup>48</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of October 30, 2012, Quantín, Norberto Julio cl Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al. si derechos personalísimos. Available at: <http://www.csin.gov.ar/confal/ConsultaCompletaFallos.do?method=verDocumentos&id=693527> defamation [injuria y calumnia] for expression that supposedly damaged the honor of a National Police of Panama official. The Court recognized that the facts leading to the criminal complaint were verified in the exercise of public functions and therefore deserved the attention and coverage of the accused as part of their work as journalists. In this regard, the Court recognized that “this is established in Article 11 of the Declaration of Basic Principles on Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, (X ANNIVERSARY - October 19, 2000-2010), which indicates, among other things, that ‘public officials are subject to greater scrutiny by society.’”

<sup>49</sup> Republic of Peru. 33° Criminal Court of the Superior Court of Justice of Lima. Case file 24304-2009-0-1801-JR-PE-33. Resolution No. 38 of June 18, 2012.

<sup>50</sup> Republic of Panama. Seventeenth Court of the First Criminal Circuit of Panama. Judgment No. 13 of July 17, 2012.

54. For its part, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation of Mexico, with the support of the jurisprudence and scholarship of the organs of the inter-American system, has established case law standards in this regard. Thus, in its judgment dated June 17, 2009,<sup>51</sup> the Supreme Court held that “freedom of the press and the right to give and receive information provides especially vigorous protection for expression and circulation of information related to politics, and more broadly, matters of public interest.” For this high court, protection of the free circulation of this kind of speech “is especially relevant in order for these freedoms to fully accomplish their strategic functions with regard to the formation of public opinion in the structural scheme of representative democracy.” Citing this Office of the Special Rapporteur’s 2008 annual report, it highlighted that special protection for political speech and speech on matters of public interest “extends to electoral speech, which focuses on candidates seeking to hold public office.” For this Tribunal, “citizen oversight of the activities of individuals who hold public office or have held it in the past (officials, elected positions, members of political parties, diplomats, private individuals performing state or other functions in the public interest, etc.) increases transparency in State activities and promotes the accountability of all of those who have governing duties. This necessarily means that there is greater space for disseminating the statements and evaluations that are inseparable from the political debate or matters of public interest.”

55. It emphasized that, “[o]ne of the specific rules that has been most agreed upon in the area of comparative law and international human rights law [...] is the rule according to which individuals who hold or have held public responsibilities [...], as well as candidates seeking to hold them, have a right to privacy and honor that is generally more flexible than the right held by ordinary citizens when it comes to the actions of the mass media in exercising their rights to express themselves and inform.” In this regard, it recalled “the instrumental relationship between freedom of expression and information and the proper development of democratic practices.”

56. As a corollary to this, for the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico, it is possible to speak of a favorable “bonus” or “special” position of the right to freedom of expression and the right to information when those rights come in conflict with the so-called “personal rights” [derechos de la personalidad] of public officials, among which are the right to privacy and the right to honor; “this is for reasons strictly linked to the type of activity that they have decided to perform, which requires intense public scrutiny of their activities.” On referring to the facts of the case, it found that “the threshold of the intensity of the criticism and debate to which persons like the one referenced in the news item in question can be exposed to is very high and not easy to cross for reasons that open the door to claims of civil or criminal liability.”

5. Case law on crimes of desacato

57. Likewise, in accordance with the foregoing, the IACHR and its Office of the Special Rapporteur have indicated repeatedly that application of the criminal offense of desacato to those who disseminate expression that is critical of public officials is, per se, contrary to the American Convention,<sup>52</sup>

---

<sup>51</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Direct Amparo Appeal 2044-2008, of June 17, 2009. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradonpublico/08020440.010.doc>

<sup>52</sup> See, IACHR, Annual Report 1994. OEA/Ser.L/V.88 Doc. 9 rev. 1. 17 February 1995. Chapter V (Report on the Compatibility of “Desacato” Laws with the American Convention on Human Rights). Title I. Available at: <http://www.cidh.org/annualrep/94eng/chap.5.htm>

given that it constitutes an application of subsequent liability for the exercise of freedom of expression. This is unnecessary in a democratic society, and it is disproportionate due to the serious effects it has on the person issuing the expression and on the free flow of information in a society. Likewise, Principle 11 of the Declaration of Principles establishes that, “[l]aws that penalize offensive expressions directed at public officials, generally known as ‘desacato laws,’ restrict freedom of expression and the right to information.”<sup>53</sup>

58. According to the Inter-American Commission, these types of laws are a measure to silence unpopular ideas and opinions and dissuade criticism by causing fear of legal action, criminal sanctions and fines. Regarding this, the IACHR has been emphatic that the desacato legislation is disproportionate due to the sanctions it establishes for criticism leveled at government institutions and their members, thus suppressing debate that is essential for the functioning of a truly democratic system, as well as unnecessarily restricting the right to freedom of thought and expression.<sup>54</sup>

59. In what has been a clear showing of fruitful dialogue that has arisen between the organs of the system and the States in the region, in the last decade laws that criminalize defamation of public officials in Mexico, Panama, Uruguay, Costa Rica, Argentina and El Salvador have been struck down.<sup>55</sup>

---

<sup>53</sup> The Inter-American Court has also examined, in specific cases, the disproportionate nature of desacato laws and of the prosecution under those laws of individuals who exercise their freedom of expression. For example, in the Case of Palamara Iribarne v. Chile the Inter-American Court noted that “by pressing a charge of contempt, criminal prosecution was used in a manner that is disproportionate and unnecessary in a democratic society, which led to the deprivation of Mr. Palamara-Iribarne’s right to freedom of thought and expression with regard to the negative opinion he had of matters that had a direct bearing on him and were closely related to the manner in which military justice authorities carried out their public duties during the proceedings instituted against him. The Court believes that the contempt laws applied to Palamara-Iribarne established sanctions that were disproportionate to the criticism leveled at government institutions and their members, thus suppressing debate, which is essential for the functioning of a truly democratic system, and unnecessarily restricting the right to freedom of thought and expression.” In the Case of Tristán Donoso v. Panama, the Inter-American Court highlighted the positive fact that after convicting Mr. Tristán Donoso for defamation [calumnia] based on the statements he made about a senior official, the country’s laws changed to prohibit sanctions for desacato and other limitations on freedom of expression. Cf., IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Paras. 142-143. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonINTER-AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf>

<sup>54</sup> See, IACHR, Annual Report 1994. OEA/Ser.L/V.88 Doc. 9 rev. 1. 17 February 1995. Chapter V (Report on the Compatibility of “Desacato” Laws with the American Convention on Human Rights). Title I. Available at: <http://www.cidh.org/annualrep/94eng/chap.5.htm>

<sup>55</sup> For Instance, Mexico repealed the federal norms that permitted individuals who offended the honor of a public official to be tried for criminal defamation, and a number of the states of the Mexican Federation have done the same. In 2007, the National Assembly of Panama similarly decriminalized defamation in relation to criticism or opinions regarding official acts or omissions of high-ranking public servants. In April 2009, the Supreme Court of Brazil declared the Press Law incompatible with the Brazilian Constitution; the Law had imposed severe prison and pecuniary penalties on journalists for the crime of defamation. In June 2009, the legislature of Uruguay eliminated from the Criminal Code the sanctions for the dissemination of information or opinions about public officials and matters of public interest, with the exception of those cases where the person allegedly affected could demonstrate the existence of “actual malice”. In November 2009, the legislature of Argentina passed a reform to the Criminal Code

Legal rulings that have sought to adjust legal frameworks to meet inter-American standards on the subject have been particularly important for this trend, declaring as they have that these types of laws are not compatible with Article 13 of the American Convention.

60. This was the case with the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala in the aforementioned judgment dated February 1, 2006,<sup>56</sup> in which it found that criticism of the performance of a public function is constitutionally exempt from criminal liability. In this regard, it explained that “due to the performance of the function that falls to them, [public officials] are subject to greater scrutiny by society, such that laws that penalize offensive expression directed at public officials are in violation of the right to freedom of expression and the right to information.”

61. For the Court, “it is inescapable that the expectation of being criminally sanctioned for expression of opinions can have a chilling effect on those who express them, such that although the criminal provision does not explicitly provide for censorship, it indeed can cause citizens to self censor in matters regarding which, in a democratic system, criticism is necessary for providing a basis for the corresponding scrutiny of public functions.”

62. In this ruling, the high court recognized that the right to freedom of expression is not absolute and is subject to subsequent liability. However, it held that “in the case of statements about public officials regarding actions taken in the exercise of their duties, [subsequent liability] can only be established and later punished through civil sanctions, as [...] the existence of a criminal sanction could inhibit the oversight of public administration that is necessary in a democratic society should the sanction be used as an instrument to repress criticism of public administration.”

63. This Court explicitly recognized that “the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has found that laws that establish the crime of desacato are not compatible with Article 13 of the American convention on Human Rights. It determined that they are not compatible with the standard of necessity and that the objectives they seek are not legitimate, on finding that this type of law lends itself to abuse as a means of silencing unpopular ideas and opinions and repressing debate that is necessary for the effective functioning of democratic institutions.” The Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala ruled similarly in judgment 863-2010 of August 24, 2010.<sup>57</sup>

64. In a similar fashion, in a judgment dated September 20, 2012,<sup>58</sup> the Constitutional Plurinational Tribunal of Bolivia declared Article 162 of the Penal Code unconstitutional. The article called for a harsher prison sentence for those who commit defamation [calumnia, injuria o difamación] against a public official (desacato). The judgment includes a broad reflection on the history of the criminal offense, the proportionality of this kind of punishment, the right to equal treatment of citizens and public officials, and the incompatibility of the crime of desacato with international human rights commitments.

65. For the Tribunal, desacato creates an unconstitutional situation of inequality of public officials and citizens, which in turns disproportionately affects the right to freedom of expression. For doing away with prison terms for the crime of defamation, and decriminalizing speech about matters of public interest. Following this trend, in December of 2009, the Supreme Court of Costa Rica derogated a provision of the Press Law that established a prison penalty for crimes against honor. Similarly, in December of 2011 the Legislative Assembly of El Salvador approved a reform that substituted fines for prison sentences where crimes against honor are concerned and established greater protection for expressions dealing with public figures or matters of public interest.

---

<sup>56</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Judgment of General Partial Unconstitutionality, Case file 1122-2005, of February 1, 2006. Available at: http://www.cc.gob.gt/siged2009/mdlWeb/frmConsultaWebVerDocumento.aspx?St\_DocumentId=807270.html

<sup>57</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Appellate Judgment of Amparo, Case file 4628-2009, of September 14, 2010. Available at: http://www.cc.gob.gt/siged2009/mdlWeb/frmConsultaWebVerDocumento.aspx?St\_DocumentId=815146.html

<sup>58</sup> Plurinational State of Bolivia. Constitutional Tribunal. Action of Unconstitutionality Case file: 00130-2012-01-AIC Judgment 1250/2012 of September 20, 2012. Available at: http://www.tribunalconstitucional.gob.bo/moduleonver\_resolucion/indexnew.php?id=125150

example, on examining the constitutionality of the criminal offense of defamation against a public official, the Constitutional Tribunal held that “the opportunity to allege, in the public interest, the commission of a crime and, fundamentally, acts of corruption, must be practically without restrictions. The ability to make those allegations must be guaranteed for all citizens, who cannot find their capacity to allege acts of corruption to be limited.”

66. In this regard, it emphasized that “the crime of desacato represents a disproportionate reaction to false allegations of the commission of crimes by public servants, as it means that a criminal complaint can only be brought against a public official when it is certain that a crime has been committed. This unnecessarily disincentivizes citizens from denouncing irregularities and prevents serious criminal investigations from being launched to corroborate or dismiss the complaints. This understanding [of desacato laws] does not mean leaving public servants defenseless when they are accused falsely of the commission of crimes.”

67. In this judgment, the Constitutional Tribunal recognized “the regional tendency of eliminating the aforementioned criminal offense, a trend that is also broadly supported by human rights bodies: fundamentally, on our continent, by the case law of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the work of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.” In this regard, it held that “maintaining this criminal offense in a domestic legal system not only represents a failure to comply with our international commitments, but also discredits democratic and legitimate governments in the eyes of the rest of the international community - of course, including the Plurinational Constitutional Tribunal itself - by raising unjustified suspicions regarding the violation of freedom of expression, an aspect that necessarily should be taken into consideration for finding the crime of desacato unconstitutional.”

6. Case law on the admissibility of limitations to freedom of expression: general framework

68. The Commission and the Inter-American Court have indicated that the right to freedom of expression is not absolute and can be subjected to certain limitations, according to subparagraphs 2, 4 and 5 of Article 13 of the American Convention. In order to be legitimate, those limitations must meet a series of specific conditions. Particularly, Article 13(2) requires that three basic conditions be met for a limitation on the right to freedom of expression to be admissible: 1) the limitation must be defined precisely and clearly in a law – in the formal and material sense, 2) the limitation must be oriented toward achieving the legitimate objectives authorized by the American Convention, and 3) the limitation must be necessary in a democratic society for achieving the legitimate aims that it seeks; strictly proportional to the aim pursued; and suitable for achieving the crucial objective that it seeks to achieve.<sup>59</sup>

69. During the last decade, the highest courts in the region have explicitly incorporated inter-American precedents on the subject. This has been done, among other places, by the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala, in previously cited ruling 1122-2005;<sup>60</sup> the Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina in Patitó, José Ángel et al. v. Newspaper La Nación et al.;<sup>61</sup> the Plurinational Constitutional

---

<sup>59</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Paras. 66 et seq. Available at:

<http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationINTER->

AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf

<sup>60</sup> In its judgment, the Court of Constitutionality indicated that “responsibility in the exercise of free expression of thought is supported in the framework of international human rights law, as set forth in the principles contained in Articles 13(2) of the American Convention on Human Rights and 19(3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.”

<sup>61</sup> In the judgment, the Supreme Court of Argentina indicated that “as held by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the case Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica”, the legality of restrictions placed on the freedom of expression contained in Article 13(2) of the American Convention on Human Rights turns on whether they seek to satisfy an imperative public interest.” The Court Tribunal of Bolivia,<sup>62</sup> in its recent judgment of September 25, 2012; the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation of Mexico; and the Constitutional Court of Colombia in its reiterated case law.<sup>63</sup> In their rulings, the courts extensively cite inter-American case law and scholarship, demonstrating its crucial role in the implementation of inter-American standards.

70. For example, in its previously-cited judgment of September 20, 2012,<sup>64</sup> the Plurinational Constitutional Tribunal of Bolivia found that the reasoning used by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica as far as the requirements for establishing subsequent liability “must be used to interpret the Constitution” of Bolivia.

71. Likewise, the Constitutional Court of Colombia has in a number of rulings explicitly recognized that “the general framework of admissible limitations to freedom of expression is provided by articles 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and 13 of the American Convention on Human Rights, which orient interpretation of Article 20 of the [Colombian Constitution] and other concordant law.”<sup>65</sup> Effectively, for the Colombian high court, “a close reading of these provisions reveals that in order to be constitutional, limitations on freedom of expression (in the strict sense), information and the press must meet the following basic requirements: (1) they must be established by law precisely and in a limited fashion; (2) they must seek to achieve certain crucial aims; (3) they must be necessary for achieving those aims; (4) they must be subsequent and not prior to the expression; (5) they must not constitute censorship in any of its forms, which includes the requirement to remain neutral regarding the emphasized that “given various means of achieving this objective, the one that least restricts the right protected should be chosen. In light of this standard, it is insufficient to demonstrate, for example, that the law fulfills a useful or convenient purpose; in order to be compatible with the Convention, restrictions must be justified according to collective goals that, due to their importance, clearly prevail over the social need to enjoy to the fullest extent the right guaranteed by Article 13 and do not limit this right to a greater degree than is strictly necessary. That is, the restriction must be proportionate to the interest that it justifies and be narrowly tailored to reach this legitimate objective (Advisory Opinion 5/85, November 13, 1985, Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism; “Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica”, Judgment of July 2, 2004; European Court of Human Rights, Case of “The Sunday Times v. United Kingdom”, Judgment of March 29, 1979, Series A, N° 30; “Barthold v. Germany”, Judgment of March 25, 1985, Series A. N° 90”).

---

<sup>62</sup> In this judgment, the Plurinational Constitutional Tribunal of Bolivia reiterates the holding in: I/A Court H.R. Caso Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment of July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107, paras. 113. 120.

<sup>63</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>; Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment C-442-11, May 25, 2011. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2011/C-442-11.htm>; Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment C-010/00, of January 19, 2000. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2000/C-010-00.htm>; Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment T-298/09, of April 23, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/T-298-09.htm>; Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment C-179-1994, April 13, 1994. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/1994/C-179-94.htm>; Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment T-293-1994, of June 27, 1994. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/1994/T-293-94.htm>; and Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment C-586-1995, of December 7, 1995. Available at: <http://www.alcaldiabogota.gov.co/sisjur/normaonNorma1.jsp?i=4315>.

<sup>64</sup> Plurinational State of Bolivia. Constitutional Tribunal. Action of Unconstitutionality Case file: 00130-2012-01-AIC Judgment 1250/2012 of September 20, 2012. Available at: http://www.tribunalconstitucional.gob.bo/moduleonver\_resolucion/indexnew.php?id=125150

<sup>65</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-298/09, of April 23, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/T-298-09.htm>; Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

content of the expression being limited; and (6) they must not interfere excessively with the exercise of this fundamental right.”<sup>66</sup>

72. For this high court, “any legal or factual action, either general or specific in nature, that directly or indirectly limits the exercise of freedom of expression in any of its manifestations, carried out by any Colombian State authority, regardless of its rank or position within the State structure, must be considered a possible invasion of the exercise of this right, and therefore must be submitted to strict constitutional review for the purposes of determining if the requirements that make a State limitation on the exercise of this important freedom admissible have been met.”<sup>67</sup>

73. Likewise, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation of Mexico has indicated repeatedly in its case law that “the general rule is that people can freely express their opinions without any limitation.”<sup>68</sup> In that sense, the court has found that in order to be considered legitimate, “restrictions on the right to freedom of expression and information must be established by law, seek the protection of one of the interests or rights protected by law under Article 13(2) of the American Convention, and meet the standards of reasonableness and proportionality.”<sup>69</sup>

7. Case law on the need for limitations to be established clearly and precisely by law

74. Both the Commission and the Inter-American Court have held “that every limitation on freedom of expression must be established beforehand in a law and established explicitly, strictly, precisely and clearly, both substantively and procedurally. This means that the law’s text should clearly establish the grounds for subsequent liability to which the exercise of freedom of expression could be subjected.”<sup>70</sup> It has been emphasized that vague, ambiguous, broad or open-ended punitive laws, by their

---

<sup>66</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>. According to the Constitutional Court of Colombia, “[t]his presumption is de facto and allows for the submission of evidence to the contrary; nevertheless, the authority that establishes the limitation bears the burden of demonstrating that the strict constitutional requirements for establishing a limitation in this area are met.” In this sense, it explained that the presumptions impose three burdens on the authorities: (i) the burden of definition, which consists of defining the end that is pursued by restricting the freedom, the legal base for the restriction and the specific effect that the freedom could have on the legal interest that is sought to be protected by the limitation; (ii) the burden of argument, according to which the authority must demonstrate that the constitutional presumptions do not apply to the case; (iii) the burden of proof, by which the authorities must demonstrate the validity of the evidence that they present in order to justify restrictions on freedom of expression.

<sup>67</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

<sup>68</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of Amparo Appeal 248/2011, July 13, 2011. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/11002480.002.doc>

<sup>69</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of Amparo Appeal 248/2011, July 13, 2011. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/11002480.002.doc>

<sup>70</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.LV/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Para. 69. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonINTER->

mere existence, discourage the dissemination of information and opinions out of fear of punishment and can lead to broad judicial interpretations that unduly restrict freedom of expression.

75. In the cases Kimel v. Argentina and Usón Ramírez v. Venezuela, the Inter-American Court specified that “should the restrictions or limitations be of a criminal nature, it is also necessary to strictly meet the requirements of the criminal definition in order to adhere to the nullum crimen nulla poena sine lege praevia principle. Thus, they must be formulated previously, in an express, accurate, and restrictive manner. The legal system must afford legal certainty to the individuals,”<sup>71</sup> especially when criminal law is the most severe and restrictive measure for establishing liability for illegal conduct.<sup>72</sup> For the Inter-American Court, “this means a clear definition of the conduct in question that establishes its characteristics and allows for it to be differentiated from activity that is not punishable or from noncriminal illegal activity.”<sup>73</sup>

76. The review of judgments contained hereinafter will examine closely not only the existence of a prior law as a basis for limitations to the right to freedom of expression, but also the degree of precision and clarity of its provisions as one of the essential aspects of this requirement.

77. For example, in its previously cited ruling T-391/07 of May 22, 2007,<sup>74</sup> the Constitutional Court of Colombia explained that “pursuant to applicable international human rights treaties and by virtue of the legality principle, limitations on freedom of expression must be established by law clearly, explicitly, in a restrictive manner, beforehand, and precisely, for which reason authorities establishing those restrictions outside legal authorization or without such authorization violate this constitutionally protected freedom.” According to this high court, “the degree of precision with which the corresponding laws are drafted must be sufficiently specific and clear to allow individuals to regulate their conduct in keeping with them. This requirement is identified with the prohibition on limiting freedom of expression with vague, ambiguous, broad or nonspecific legal mandates.” Although the court recognizes that it is impossible to reach a level of absolute certainty in the wording of laws, “the degree of precision, specificity and clarity in the legal definition of the limitation must be such that it avoids discrimination, persecution and arbitrary actions by the authorities in charge of enforcing the law in question.” On ruling on the action for protection, the Constitutional Court of Colombia found that the restriction under discussion was based on vague parameters whose specific content was not clarified by the judge who ordered the measure, such as “public morality,” the “defense of public patrimony,” the “cultural heritage of the nation,” “public safety,” “public health,” and the “rights of radio consumers and users in Colombia.”

78. The legitimacy of vague and ambiguous restrictions to freedom of expression had already been taken up by the Constitutional Court of Colombia in ruling C-010/00 of January 19, 2000,<sup>75</sup> which raised questions regarding a law ordering radio broadcasters to follow “ambiguous and nonexistent ‘universal dictates of decorum and good taste,’ as the order implies the predominance of certain world

---

AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf

<sup>71</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Kimel v. Argentina. Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of May 2, 2008. Series C No. 17, para. 63; Case of Usón Ramírez v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exceptions, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of November 20, 2009. Series C No. 207, para. 55.

<sup>72</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Usón Ramírez v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exceptions, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of November 20, 2009. Series C No. 207, para. 55.

<sup>73</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Usón Ramírez v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exceptions, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of November 20, 2009. Series C No. 207, para. 55.

<sup>74</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

<sup>75</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-010/00, of January 19, 2000. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2000/C-010-00.htm>

views over others.”<sup>76</sup> It expressed that these notions have to do with aesthetic criteria that is highly indeterminate and culturally relative, subject to ex post facto definition by the entities regulating radio frequencies, and that the law fails to recognize “the requirement that limitations to freedom of expression be established specifically, restrictively and beforehand, by law, as Article 13-2 of the Inter-American Convention (sic) and Article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of the United Nations indicate.”

79. In that judgment, the Court also ruled unconstitutional the provision that prohibited a “haranguing, speechifying or declamatory tone” in radio broadcasts. For the court, “the enormous ambiguity that the application of this restriction would imply would place freedom of expression at excessive risk, without it being clear that the provision helps to achieve an important constitutional aim.” Thus, it highlighted that “even if one could eventually theoretically define what a haranguing, speechifying, or declamatory tone is, the practice of defining whether a specific broadcast should or should not be classified as having one or more of these features would be very problematic, as what is at issue is a classification of degree that is very difficult to specify. It is therefore not clear as of what level of vehemence or passion on the part of the speaker we would begin to see a tone that could be qualified as harassing or speechifying. For this reason, the definition of which content is punishable would be left to the subjective criteria of the authorities in charge of monitoring compliance with those regulations.”

80. Similarly, in a judgment dated June 21, 2012, the Supreme Court of the United States ruled in the cases of FCC, et al. v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., et al., Petitioners v. Fox Television Stations, Inc. et al. and the case of FCC, et al., petitioners v. ABC, Inc., et al.<sup>77</sup> that the provisions on the use of “fleeting expletives” that the Federal Communications Commission applied to issue fines to these networks and their affiliates were excessively vague from a constitutional point of view, which may have had a chilling effect on expression. In its analysis of the cases, the Court found that the history of Federal Communications Commission regulation makes it clear that the policy in force at the time of the broadcasts in question did not provide reasonable warning to Fox or ABC. In this regard, the Court recalled that according to the “void for vagueness” doctrine, a punishment or sanction does not provide due process if its legal basis does not give a “person of ordinary intelligence” reasonable warning regarding what is prohibited or is so standardless that it authorizes or invites arbitrary or discriminatory application.

81. Although the Supreme Court did not examine the First Amendment implications of the Federal Communications Commissions’ indecency policies, it indicated that “even when speech is not at issue, the void for vagueness doctrine addresses at least two connected but discrete due process concerns: first, that regulated parties should know what is required of them so they may act accordingly; second, precision and guidance are necessary so that those enforcing the law do not act in an arbitrary or discriminatory way. When speech is involved, rigorous adherence to those requirements is necessary to ensure that ambiguity does not chill protected speech.”

82. As a corollary to this, in recent years some courts in the region have ruled specifically on the formulation of the crime of defamation [injuria y calumnia] in criminal codes and their compatibility with the fundamental nullum crimen nulla poena sine lege praevia principle and the right to freedom of expression. For example, in the judgment declaring Article 1 of the Press Law of the state of Guanajuato unconstitutional,<sup>78</sup> the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico explained that when rules that establish subsequent liability “are criminal in nature and allow individuals to be deprived of property and fundamental rights - including, in some cases, their liberty - the requirements regarding [strict formulation of the law] are even more vigorous.” On examining the facts of the specific case, it concluded that the

---

<sup>76</sup> Article 2. “Without prejudice to the freedom of information, broadcasting services should be designed to disseminate culture and affirm the essential values of the Colombian nationality. Radio programs must use the Castilian language properly and respect the universal standards of decorum and good taste.”

<sup>77</sup> United States of America. Supreme Court. Federal Communications Commission, et al. v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., Opinion No. 10-1293 (2012). Available at: <http://www.supremecourt.gov/opinionon11pdf/10-1293f3e5.pdf>

<sup>78</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Direct Amparo Appeal 2044-2008, of June 17, 2009. Available at: http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/08020440\_010.doc.

provision that served as the basis for the criminal conviction in question<sup>79</sup> does not “satisfy the conditions of the restrictiveness that is part of the general nullum crimen nulla poena sine lege praevia principle, nor the requirement, functionally equivalent in this case, that every restriction of freedom of expression be established beforehand in a law with the status of statute, whose wording is clear and precise.”

83. In this regard, the Supreme Court explained that, first of all, there is “a patent lack of clarity [...] produced by the structurally defective construction of something that in our system [...] is subjected to strict requirements: the wording of a criminal offense.” Second, it found that some of the terms of the provision were obviously vague and excessive in scope, as they made reference to merely hypothetical damages and covered both direct violations of reputation, such as simple “discrediting,” and violations that individuals could suffer “to their interests.” For the Court, “the presence of this latter expression irredeemably blurs the interest or right that the legislators supposedly must protect from abusive exercises of freedom of expression and leaves the criminal offense completely open.”

84. Analogously, the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala indicated in the aforementioned ruling of February 1, 2006, that the principle of legality in criminal matters is even more relevant in democratic systems when what is at issue is punishing “the carrying out of conduct that according to the spirit of a constitutional system cannot be punished as criminal.”<sup>80</sup>

8. Case law on the need for limitations to be oriented toward achieving a legitimate aim recognized by the American Convention

85. The second condition that limitations on freedom of expression must meet according to the Convention is that they must be oriented toward achieving aims that are authorized by the Convention. Effectively, the American Convention narrowly establishes the aims that can serve as a basis for a legitimate limitation of freedom of expression, those being respect for the rights or reputations of others and the protection of national security, public order, or public health or morals. These are the only aims authorized. This is explained by the fact that the limitations must be necessary in order to achieve imperative public interests that, due to their importance in specific cases, clearly prevail over society's need for full enjoyment of the freedom of expression protected by Article 13.

86. This Office of the Special Rapporteur has emphasized that States are not free to interpret the content of these aims however they wish in order to justify the limitation of freedom of expression in specific cases.<sup>81</sup>

87. With a similar tone, in previously-cited judgment T-391/07,<sup>82</sup> the Constitutional Court of Colombia explained that in order to be legitimate, limitations on freedom of expression must “seek to accomplish certain imperative ends or aims that have been set forth in the abstract in applicable treaties - the protection of the rights of others, protection of security and public order, protection of public health and protection of public morals - but that the limitations must be specific and set forth by law.”

---

<sup>79</sup> United States of Mexico. Article 1 of the Press Law of Guanajuato. Available at: <http://docs.mexico.justia.com/estataleonguanajuato/ley-de-imprenta-del-estado-de-guanajuato.pdf>

<sup>80</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Judgment of General Partial Unconstitutionality, Case file 1122-2005, February 1, 2006. Available at: http://www.cc.gob.gt/siged2009/mdlWeb/frmConsultaWebVerDocumento.aspx?St\_DocumentoId=807270.html

<sup>81</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.LV/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Para. 75. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonINTER-AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf>

<sup>82</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-391/07, of May 22, 2007. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2007/T-391-07.htm>

88. In this regard, the Court observed that these ends (a) must be subjected to strict interpretation in order to maximize the range of freedom of expression; (b) the list of aims must be a restrictive one, outside of which there are no additional justifications or aims for limiting freedom of expression; (c) in harmony with the principle of legality, it is not enough to invoke aims in the abstract to justify a particular limitation; it must be demonstrated in each specific case that the elements exist to conclude that a specific and imperative public interest effectively exists; (d) it must be compatible with the essential principles of a democratic society and social rule of law, and (e) it must be compatible with the principle of human dignity.

89. In the case in question, the Court specified that “it is not enough to limit the broadcasting of sexually explicit expression with the mere invocation of “public morality” - a very vague concept - without specifying the form this takes in this particular case as far as a specific interest deserving of constitutional protection. Nor can broadcasts be restricted based on a mention of the “rights of children” in the abstract, without closely and strictly bearing the burden of proof of demonstrating both the predominant presence of children in the audience to a particular expression and the damage that they have suffered or could clearly suffer by virtue of that expression.”

9. Case law on the requirement that the limitation must be necessary in a democratic society, suitable for achieving the imperative aim that it seeks to achieve, and strictly proportional to the end sought

90. Inter-American case law has been emphatic in the sense that States that place limitations on freedom of expression are required to demonstrate that the limitations are necessary in a democratic society for achieving the imperative aims that they seek. In this sense, it has specified that in order for a restriction to be legitimate, it must clearly establish the true and imperative need for establishing a limitation: that is, that the aim cannot be reasonably achieved by means that are less restrictive to human rights, which in turn suggests that the means of restriction is in reality the least burdensome available. In addition, it has established that any limitation to the right to freedom of expression must be a suitable instrument for achieving the end sought through its imposition - that is, it must be a measure that effectively leads to achieving the legitimate and imperative aims pursued.

91. But restrictions to freedom of expression must be more than suitable and necessary. In addition, they must be strictly proportional to the legitimate aim that justifies them, and they must hew strictly to achieving that aim, interfering as little as possible in the legitimate exercise of that freedom.<sup>83</sup> According to the Inter-American Court, in order to establish the proportionality of a restriction that limits freedom of expression with the aim of preserving other rights, three factors must be evaluated: (i) the degree to which the other right is affected - greatly, intermediately, moderately; (ii) the importance of ensuring the other right; and (iii) if ensuring the other right justifies restriction of freedom of expression. There are no a priori answers or formulas for general application in this area: the result of the balance struck will be different in each case, in some cases giving precedence to freedom of expression, in others <sup>83</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Eduardo Kimel v. Argentina. Judgment of May 2, 2008. Series C No.177, para. 83; Case of Palamara Iribarne v. Chile. Judgment of November 22, 2005. Series C No. 135, para. 85; Caso Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment of July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107, para. 123; The Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism (Arts. 13 and 29 of the American Convention on Human Rights). Advisory Opinion 5/85 of November 13, 1985. Series A No. 5, para. 46; IACHR. Pleadings before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Transcribed in: I/A Court H.R. Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment of July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107, para. 101.1.B).

---

to the other right.<sup>84</sup> If subsequent liability applied in a specific case turns out to be disproportionate or does not serve the interests of justice, Article 13(2) of the American Convention has been violated.<sup>85</sup>

92. In harmony with this, a number of judgments from the Constitutional Court of Colombia have explained that pursuant to international treaties, “the third requirement established in order for limitations on freedom of expression to be acceptable [...] is that they must be necessary and proportional for achieving the aim pursued.”<sup>86</sup> In a number of its rulings, the Court has found legal provisions, administrative actions and court orders to be in violation of the Constitution for failing to meet this requirement.

93. For example, in previously cited ruling C-010/00,<sup>87</sup> the Court found a number of provisions of Law 74 of 1966, on radio broadcasting, to be unconstitutional after subjecting them to a strict examination of proportionality pursuant to the requirements established by the country’s Constitution and the American Convention. First, the high court observed that a provision that prohibits certain types of expression on the radio may seek a constitutionally significant aim, such as preventing the disturbance of public order, but it would not be constitutional solely for this reason. The Court explained that the measure must also be suitable and proportional on pursuing that aim. In this regard, it emphasized that “in order for the limitations to be legitimate, it is necessary, pursuant to the terms of the Inter-American Court, for the restriction not only to hew closely to achieving that aim, but that in addition, that the restriction be the one that places the least limitation on freedom of expression.”

94. In the specific case in question, the Constitutional Court found that a provision that prohibits radio broadcasts with a “haranguing, speechifying or declamatory tone” does not meet this standard, as “one could call on listeners in a heated and emphatic tone to respect public order and obey laws, meaning the provision would exclude completely innocuous speech.” A provision prohibiting journalistic or news programs on the radio from portraying another person through imitation of that person’s voice also does not meet this standard. The Court indicated that although the prohibition in question is a clear and narrow restriction, “it restricts freedom of expression beyond what is strictly necessary to ensure the truth of the news.” It explained that “those programs could include a section, clearly differentiated from the presentation of the news, in which imitations and parodies of some personality are used in a critical or humorous way. Under those conditions, and as long as the media outlet takes the necessary measures to prevent causing any confusion for the listener, the Court finds that the absolute prohibition of voice imitations is excessive, even for these programs.”

95. Finally, on examining the legitimacy of a law that bans broadcasting person-to-person messages over the radio, such as greetings and dedications, the Court expressed that it could not find a constitutional interest of great importance to justify it. On one hand, it considered an argument according to which the ban seeks to ensure “greater seriousness among broadcasters on preventing the dissemination of banal, capricious or colloquial messages over the radio.” Regarding this, the Court found that “this aim is not sufficiently constitutionally relevant for authorizing a general legal restriction of freedom of expression, as established in the law being challenged.” On the other hand, it weighed an

---

<sup>84</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Kimel v. Argentina. Judgment of May 2, 2008. Series C No. 177, para. 84.

<sup>85</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Paras. 84-89. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonINTER-AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf> argument according to which this prohibition protected the reputation of individuals and the public order. Although it recognized that the aims were legitimate in this case and of sufficient constitutional importance to authorize a restriction of radio freedom, it emphasized that “in no way is it clear that a general ban on broadcasting these interpersonal messages constitutes a proportional and necessary measure for achieving these aims, given that not only is the prohibition absolute, meaning that totally innocuous and banal communications are unjustly excluded, but also, the law could establish more effective measures that are less harmful to freedom of expression in order to protect these same constitutional rights.”

<sup>86</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-417/09, June 26, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/C-417-09.htm>

<sup>87</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-010/00, January 19, 2000. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2000/C-010-00.htm>

96. Another case relevant for the application of a balance of proportionality can be found in judgment, C-417/09 of June 26, 2009,<sup>88</sup> in which the Constitutional Court of Colombia used the standards developed previously to examine the legitimacy of a provision of the Penal Code that restricted individuals accused of defamation [calumnia] from exercising the exceptio veritatis. The provision in question prevented the judge from admitting evidence regarding the veracity of the imputation of a sanctionable conduct that has been the subject of a judgment of acquittal, termination of investigation or dismissal of the charges.<sup>89</sup> The Constitutional Court found that as the issue involves a fundamental right that is especially valuable for the Colombian constitutional system, as is the right to freedom of expression and information, a more strict and intense balance of proportionality must be applied. In its ruling, the Court indicated that in these kinds of balances, it is not enough to establish that the measure is legitimate, apt and effectively leads to achieving the proposed aim: “one also must also study whether the provision is necessary and strictly proportional.”

97. The judgment found that the provision under examination had a legitimate aim from a constitutional perspective, as it sought to protect fundamental rights like honor and good name. In addition, the provision was adequate and even effectively led to achieving that aim. However, the Court found that the balance of proportionality related with necessity and strict proportionality led to a different conclusion. After noting that other legal measures existed that were sufficient and pertinent for achieving the legitimate aim sought, the Court then stated the following:

“The measure taken by the provision is neither imperative, nor useful; in contrast, it is extremely burdensome for freedom of expression. Exceptio veritatis frees a plaintiff accused of the crime of defamation [calumnia o injuria] of criminal liability when that person demonstrates that the statements were true. Specifically, what distinguishes the provision under review is that it excludes these grounds for exemption even for situations in which the person accused of the crime of defamation [calumnia] demonstrates the truth of his or her statements. [...] That is, according to the provision under review, for cases in which a final ruling has been handed down by the criminal justice system, the only possible route is forgetting, independent of

---

<sup>88</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-417/09, June 26, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/C-417-09.htm>. Similarly, in Judgment T-391/07 the Constitutional Court of Colombia further developed the criteria according to which the constitutional judge must perform the strict proportionality test in these cases.

<sup>89</sup> The provision examined is Article 224(1) of the Criminal Code, according to which:

“Article 224. Defenses. Criminal responsibility will not result from the conduct described in the preceding articles if the truth of the imputations is proven.

However, no proof will be admitted:

1. Regarding the imputation of any sanctionable conduct that has been the subject of a judgment of acquittal, termination of investigation or dismissal of the charges or the equivalent, unless it is due to the prescription of the cause of action, and the conduct a person has been accused of and its seriousness for the legal system and the functioning of national institutions.

2. Regarding the imputation of conduct that involves sexual, romantic, marital or family life, or the victim of a crime against liberty and sexual integrity.

Evidently, this represents a radical limitation to freedom of expression that, given the preeminent character of this right, cannot be accepted from a constitutional perspective. Therefore, the conclusion is that the provision under review does not cross the threshold of necessity, as it employs an excessive measure for protecting honor and good name, and, from that substantive point of view, the principles of res judicata and legal certainty, abolishing in practice the freedom of expression and information for the cases in question. That is, in the words of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, which have been taken up by this constitutional court, the provision does not meet the requirement of providing for a measure "interfere to the least extent possible with the effective exercise of the right."

10. Case law on subsequent civil liability

98. As far the imposition of subsequent liability through civil sanctions, the Inter-American Court established in the case of Tristán Donoso v. Panamá that these could be just as intimidating and have just as much of a chilling effect on the exercise of freedom of expression as a criminal sanction. In this regard, it observed that "the fear of a civil penalty, considering the claim [...] for a very steep civil reparation, may be, in any case, equally or more intimidating and inhibiting for the exercise of freedom of expression than a criminal punishment, since it has the potential to attain the personal and family life of an individual who accuses a public official, with the evident and very negative result of self-censorship both in the affected party and in other potential critics of the actions taken by a public official."<sup>90</sup>

99. In a judgment dated April 30, 2009, the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil found after examining the unconstitutionality of the Press Act passed during the military regime that the rewarding of excessive pecuniary indemnities against media outlets can constitute in itself a powerful inhibiting influence on freedom of expression. For the tribunal indemnities of this kind violate the proportionality principle of restrictions and are therefore a violation of freedom of expression. In this sense, it found that "the magistrate must take into account that every conviction of a media outlet, in whatever form it may take or tool it may use, inhibits the future exercise of freedom of expression and therefore reduces the possibility of moving forward in democratic learning."

11. Case law on the special protection of opinions and the nonexistence of a crime of opinion

100. As inter-American scholarship and case law have specified, "truthfulness or falseness may only be established in respect of facts, not opinions."<sup>91</sup> Consequently, no one can be held liable for a simple opinion about a person or particular fact.<sup>92</sup>

101. The Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina ruled similarly in a October 30, 2012, judgment in the case of Quantín, Norberto Julio v. Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al on derechos personalísimos. In that ruling, the high court granted constitutional protection to the broadcasting of

---

<sup>90</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Tristán Donoso v. Panamá. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 27, 2009 Series C No. 193, para. 129.

<sup>91</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Kimel v. Argentina. Judgment of May 2, 2008. Series C No. 177, para. 93; Case of Tristán Donoso v. Panamá. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 27, 2009 Series C No. 193, para.124.

<sup>92</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Para. 109. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonINTER-AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf>

opinions over the radio that, although potentially considered shocking or painful for the listener, must be tolerated for the purposes of fostering broad and democratic debate in society.

102. In the case, the Supreme Court examined through an extraordinary remedy the legitimacy of a civil damages award for the broadcast of expression that was allegedly defamatory [injuriosas y calumniosas] toward a former public official. The first thing that the high court observed was that it was necessary to specify whether what was at issue was expression in which “priority is given to the statement of facts (factual assertions) or if on the contrary, one is in the presence of expression in which ideas, opinions, critical or value judgments, or, why not, conjectures and hypotheses are what predominate.”<sup>93</sup> In this regard, it held that the expression could be guilty of serious hyperbole without making accusations “of any specific illegal fact and that, therefore, the expression cannot be subjected to a test of veracity. Thus one is limited to attributing a certain ideology” to the author; the court reiterated that, pursuant to inter-American case law, on issues of public interest, freedom of expression protects the expression of ideas that “shock, irritate or upset public officials or any sector of the population.”<sup>94</sup>

103. With that same structure of ideas, the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Costa Rica<sup>95</sup> has emphasized in a number of judgments that the right to correction and reply is granted only in response to the dissemination of newsworthy or factual information considered to be inaccurate and damaging, and not with regard to “personal ideas or opinions held by their author - good or bad, and whether or not they are shared - and whose free expression is also protected by constitutional law.” On the same subject, individual criminal court judge of Paraguay Manuel Aguirre Rodas, in a judgment dated June 30, 2011, acquitted a journalist accused of the crime of defamation [injuria y calumnia], on finding that the news item, which referred to allegations of political corruption, contained opinions based on verifiable documents and sources, which did not merit a sanction<sup>96</sup>.

---

<sup>93</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of October 30, 2012, “Quantín, Norberto Julio v. Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al. on derechos personalísimos”. Available at: <http://www.csjn.gov.ar/confal/ConsultaCompletaFallos.do?method=verDocumentos&id=693527>

<sup>94</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of October 30, 2012, “Quantín, Norberto Julio v. Benedetti, Jorge Enrique et al. on derechos personalísimos”. Available at: <http://www.csjn.gov.ar/confal/ConsultaCompletaFallos.do?method=verDocumentos&id=693527>. The Constitutional Court of Colombia has also examined the different treatment that should be accorded to opinions or value judgments. In the previously cited judgment 417/09 of June 26, 2009, the Court indicated generally that “an opinion, unless it is expressed with the express and effective purpose of offending and causing real harm to persons or unless it involves the inclusion of speech that is not protected, ... is and must be free, because in a democratic and pluralistic State founded upon the dignity of the human being, inter alia, taking into account that an opinion consists of a point of view, a judgment, a perception of reality derived from the exercise of other fundamental liberties such as thought, conscience and religion, and must be the subject of broad respect and protection, even when it contains expressions that are considered ungracious, offensive or disturbing for the State or for others. That is to say that in contrast to the affirmation of facts that are presented by means of the exercise of freedom of information or the press, which are seen as having factual support, complying with the constitutional requirements of truth and impartiality or social responsibility in the case of the communications media, an opinion is an idea, an appearance or a way of seeing the world, and if it is found to be unjust or impertinent, it should be fought with other opinions or appearances, and not with sanctions of any kind, least of all criminal.” Constitutional Court of Colombia. Judgment C-417/09, of June 26, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/C-417-09.htm>

<sup>95</sup> Republic of Costa Rica. Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of November 7, 2002, issued in a remedy of amparo filed by Roberto Hernández González against the newspaper La Nación and Edgar Espinoza. Available at: http://200.91.68.20/pj/scij/busqueda/jurisprudencia/jur\_repartidor.asp?param1=TSS&nValor1=1&nValor2=221646&strTipM=T&strDirSel=directo

<sup>96</sup> Individual Tribunal of the Republic of Paraguay. Presiding Judge Manuel Aguirre Rodas. June, 30 2011. Case Sandra López Curtido on difamación et al. S.D.N. No. 41. Available at: <http://archivo.abc.com.py/descargables/sd-sandra-lopez262.pdf>; See also: Instituto Prensa y Sociedad (IPYS). July 1, 2011. Paraguay: Absuelven a periodista acusada de difamación por empresaria. Available at: <http://www.ipys.org/index.php?q=noticia/695>; ABC. July 1, 2011. Magistrado absuelve a periodista y ratifica libertad de prensa y opinión. Available at: <http://www.abc.com.py/nota/magistrado-absuelve-a-periodista-y-ratifica-libertad-de-prensa-y-opinion/>; ABC. June 29, 2011. Abogados de Zuni pidieron pena de dos años y medio contra periodista; Available at: <http://www.abc.com.py/nota/abogados-de-zuni-solicitaron-pena-de-dos-anos-y-medio-contra-periodista/>; Paraguay.com. June 30, 2011. Sandra López: “Con el fallo ganó la libertad de expresión”. Available at: <http://www.paraguay.com/nacionales/sandra-lopez-con-el-fallo-gano-la-libertad-de-expresion-72501>

12. Case law on the application of the principle of “actual malice” when establishing subsequent liability

104. Interpreting the American Convention, Principle 10 of the Declaration of Principles states that, “[p]rivacy laws should not inhibit or restrict investigation and dissemination of information of public interest. The protection of a person’s reputation should only be guaranteed through civil sanctions in those cases in which the person offended is a public official, a public person or a private person who has voluntarily become involved in matters of public interest. In addition, in these cases, it must be proven that in disseminating the news, the social communicator had the specific intent to inflict harm, was fully aware that false news was disseminated, or acted with gross negligence in efforts to determine the truth or falsity of such news.”

105. The Inter-American Court has taken the opportunity to rule on the application of the standard of “actual malice.” Thus for example, in the case of Usón Ramírez v. Venezuela, the Inter-American Court found that the statements for which Usón was convicted had been formulated conditionally, and as a consequence could not be understood as an expression intended to cause damage: “[i]n this case, when conditioning his opinion in such a way, it is clear that Mr. Usón Ramírez was not stating that a premeditated crime had been committed, but that in his opinion such a crime seemed to have been committed in case the hypothesis about the use of the flamethrower was true. An opinion conditioned in such a way cannot be subjected elements which question veracity. Furthermore, the above shows that Mr. Usón Ramírez lacked any specific intention to insult, offend, or disparage since if he had had the intent to do so, he would not have conditioned his opinion in such a way.”<sup>97</sup>

106. In harmony with this, in cases of subsequent liability, senior courts in the region have used this standard when evaluating whether someone is individually liable for the publication of information that is in the public interest. For example, in the previously-cited judgment of June 28, 2008, the Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina noted in the case of Patitó, José Ángel et al. v. Diario La Nación et al.<sup>98</sup> that it has incorporated into its case law “the principle of actual malice, and not the test of truth as adequate protection of freedom of expression” when what is at issue is the publication of expression that may have negative effects on the reputation of persons connected with public issues. Effectively, in this ruling, the high court reiterated its settled case law in the sense that “with regard to information referring to public officials, public figures, or private individuals who have participated in public issues, when the news item contains false or inaccurate expressions, those who consider themselves affected must demonstrate that those who made the expression or accusation knew the news item was false and acted with the knowledge that it was false or with evident recklessness with regard to its veracity.”

107. The Supreme Court explained that “the principle of actual malice, in contrast to the test of veracity, does not operate based on the objective truth or falsehood of expression, given that it is applied when it is already accepted that the truth of the statements at issue cannot be proven, or when the statements are erroneous, or even false. What is subject to discussion and proof, if actual malice is at issue, is whatever knowledge that the journalist or media outlet had (or should have had) of the falsehood or possible falsehood. This is the first difference, and an important one. The second difference, no less important, is that the specific content of the subjective factor to which the concept of actual malice alludes (knowledge of the falsehood or negligent indifference regarding the possibility of falsehood) cannot be presumed to be the case; rather, it must be proven with evidence by the person bringing suit against the journalist or media outlet.”

---

<sup>97</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Usón Ramírez v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of November 20, 2009. Series C No. 207. Para. 86.

<sup>98</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of June 24, 2008, P.2297.XL, Patitó, José Ángel et al. v. Diario La Nación et al.. Available at: <http://www.cpi.org/newon2008/americonArgentina.Court.24-06-08.pdf>

108. In this ruling, the Supreme Court expressed that the principle of actual malice is based on the recognition of the role that investigative journalism plays in public matters in a democratic system. According to the court, “excessive rigor and intolerance of error would lead to self-censorship, depriving the citizenry of the crucial information necessary for making decisions about their representatives.” Based on these considerations, the Court concluded that on having failed to apply this principle in the case in question, “the space necessary for the development of broad and robust public debate on subjects of general interest and that has been guaranteed by Article 14 of the National Constitution was unacceptably restricted.” This standard was repeated in a later ruling handed down on May 19, 2010, in the case of Di Salvo, Miguel Ángel v. Diario La Mañana on daños y perjuicios.<sup>99</sup>

109. Likewise, the First Chamber of the Mexican Supreme Court of Justice found in a judgment dated June 17, 2009,<sup>100</sup> that the standard of malice “requires expression that allegedly causes damage to the reputation of a public official to have been issued with the intention of causing that damage, with the knowledge that the facts being disseminated were false, or with clear negligence regarding the review of apparent veracity or lack of veracity of the facts. Otherwise, individuals could be gripped by the fear of completely accidentally committing a violation and becoming liable for the issuing of expression or information, which could directly or indirectly lead to abruptly restricting the exercise of their rights to express themselves or inform.”

110. The Permanent Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Peru explained that “meddling with the reputation or the right to honor of a politician or a public official - whose position is political in nature - subject to appointment by a political body or not - in the exercise of political authority will be legitimate [...] as long as the facts, which entail matters of public or general interest, are true - understood as subjective veracity: knowledge of the falsehood of what was expressed or later knowledge that the fact being alleged is false (specific intent and willful ignorance, respectively) - and that, where appropriate, the judgment calls have sufficient factual basis.”<sup>101</sup> In this regard, it recalled that when what is at issue is expression directed at public officials exercising their public authorities, the limitations on the right to freedom of expression must be interpreted restrictively.

111. Another case that is illustrative in its application of the doctrine of “actual malice” can be found in judgment No. 161 handed down on June 2, 2010, by the Criminal Appeals Court of Uruguay.<sup>102</sup> In this ruling, the Tribunal overturned the conviction of the managing director of weekly Tres Puntos, in Paysandú, for the crime of defamation that had been based on two articles raising questions about connections between regional police and acts of corruption. According to the Tribunal, the facts must be examined “according to the ‘actual malice’ of the author of the article, which is what is legally required in order to cross the threshold of criminal responsibility.” In this regard, it found that the accusation was exempt from liability, as pursuant to this doctrine, “the news items do not reflect and the plaintiff has not proven - in keeping with his burden of proof under the law - that the author intended to offend anyone or violate their privacy.” For the tribunal, “the journalist divulged information about the public official that appeared plausible according to the evidence and in addition, there is no indication of any intention to discredit the official or violate his privacy with actual malice.” Finally, the Tribunal expressed that on issues in the public interest, the legal system in force in that country places the burden on the plaintiff to prove that the journalists acted with knowledge that the fact attributed was false or with the sole purpose of insulting the person or violating his privacy.

---

<sup>99</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of May 19, 2010, D 281 XLIII, Di Salvo, Miguel Ángel v. Diario La Mañana on daños y perjuicios. Available at: http://www.csin.gov.ar/expcon/documentoonCasefileoncons\_expe.jsp

<sup>100</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. Direct Amparo Appeal 2044-2008, June 17, 2009. Available at: http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/08020440\_010.doc.

<sup>101</sup> Republic of Peru. Permanent Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Judgment of June 18, 2010. RN No. 1372/2010. Available at: <http://www.pj.gob.pe/wponwcm/connect/fdec1e004bf42509a767b73aa702a2d1/SPP+R.N.+N%C2%BA+1372-2010+-+Amazonas.pdf?MOD=AJPERES&CACHEID=fdec1e004bf42509a767b73aa702a2d1>

<sup>102</sup> Oriental Republic of Uruguay. Court of Criminal Appeals. Judgment No. 161 of July 12, 2010. Case files: COELHO JURIOL—Ricardo José. Denuncia Ley 16.099 v. MORALES BARTABURO, Rodrigo. I.U.E.: 30257/2009.

112. The 17th Criminal Circuit Court of the First Circuit in Panama ruled similarly in judgment No. 13 of July 17, 2012<sup>103</sup>, whereby it acquitted three journalists accused of the crime of defamation [injuria y calumnia] for expression issued to the alleged detriment of the honor of an official of the Panama National Police. In its ruling, the Court indicated that the journalists “did not act with actual malice, as there is no indication of a reckless disregard for the truth.”

13. Case law on the application of the principle of fair (or neutral) reporting

113. The ruling of the Inter-American Court in the case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica introduces the principle of “neutral reporting” or “fair reporting” to the inter-American system. According to this principle, those who disseminate a news item that is limited to copying statements or information from third parties will not be subjected to tests of veracity, as long as the source is cited. In the case in question, the journalist was criminally convicted because according to the judge ruling on the case, he was not able to prove the truth of facts narrated in his articles that referred to the conduct of a public official abroad, even though the news item was a faithful reproduction of content from a number of different European newspapers.<sup>104</sup> In its ruling, the Inter-American Court found that the conviction of journalist Herrera Ulloa constituted an excessive limitation of freedom of expression, as the news item disseminated by him had been faithfully attributed to a source.

114. In a judgment dated October 11, 2011, the Temporary Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Peru<sup>105</sup> acquitted a journalist of the crime of aggravated defamation and fully annulled the July 27, 2011, judgment of the Superior Court of Ucayali upholding a conviction. The journalist had been convicted and sentenced to 18 months in prison and payment of 20,000 nuevos soles in civil damages (about US$7,400). In its ruling, the Criminal Chamber indicated that “what the defendant did [...] was disseminate something that had already been previously disseminated. In the scholarship, the aforementioned conduct is known as neutral reportage.” Regarding this, it explained that “scholarship on the issue indicates that there is no liability when: 1) the individual issuing the expression limits him or herself to disseminating content that has already been disseminated, 2) the media outlet that previously disseminated the news item is identified, and 3) what is being repeated is not distorted.”

115. On ruling in the case in question, it held that “in sum, it is not that the defendant before the court has accused the citizen [...] of committing criminal acts; to think this would be irrational if one takes into account that the citizen has already been brought to trial for the facts indicated in the publication, and that the publication even indicates this using underlined sections of text corresponding to links on the internet that according to the defendant would take us to the source of the information from which the information in the news item related with the plaintiff was taken, having [...] faithfully reported what appeared in previous publications.” Based on this, it concluded that “the defendant has made proper use of his right to inform through neutral reportage - that is, he has not surpassed the limits imposed on this fundamental right, in the sense that the defendant’s right to honor has not been affected, as his status as a politician holding state office subjects him to a degree of criticism.”

116. On referring to the publication of information on a private individual based on information provided by an official source, the Supreme Court of New Jersey ruled that the “fair-report privilege” protects journalists who have provided accurate information regarding official documents such as court records and final judgments. Thus, in a judgment dated May 11, 2010, in the case of Salzano v. North Jersey Media Group,<sup>106</sup> the Court explained that in general terms, “one such privilege is accorded to the publication of defamatory matter concerning another in a report of an official action or proceeding, or of a

---

<sup>103</sup> Republic of Panama. Seventeenth Court of the First Criminal Circuit of Panama. Judgment of Acquittal No. 13 of July 17, 2012.

<sup>104</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Herrera Ulloa v. Costa Rica. Judgment of July 2, 2004. Series C No. 107. Paras. 131-133.

<sup>105</sup> Republic of Peru. Transitory Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. October 11, 2011 (R.N. No. 2436-11). Available at: http://historico.pj.gob.pe/CorteSuprema/documentoonSPT\_R\_N\_N\_2436\_2011\_UCAYALI.pdf

<sup>106</sup> United States of America. Supreme Court of New Jersey. Salzano v. North Jersey Media Group. Judgment of May 11, 2010. Available at: http://www.aclu-nj.org/download\_file/view\_inline/65/391/

meeting open to the public that deals with a matter of public concern”. Accordingly, “if the publication, in fact, satisfies that standard, the state of mind of the publisher is irrelevant [...] and thus, immune from a defamation suit because of the fair-report privilege”.

117. According to this line of reasoning, it found that the “fair-report privilege” also applies to briefs filed in any court action related to the proceedings. In this regard, it specified that “we are convinced that the public policy underpinning of the fair-report privilege—advancement of the public’s interest in the free flow of information about official actions—would be thwarted by the recognition of the initial pleadings exception. A full, fair, and accurate report regarding a public document that marks the commencement of a judicial proceeding deserves the protection of the privilege”.

118. The Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina ruled in a similar sense in the case of Canavesi, Eduardo Joaquín et al. v. el Diario 'El Día' Soc. Impr. Platense SACI on daños y perjuicios<sup>107</sup>, brought against newspaper El Día in the city of La Plata for having published false information on a private individual based on information provided by an official source. In a brief judgment handed down on June 8, 2010, the Supreme Court overturned the ruling against the newspaper, indicating that “it shares and adopts the reasoning and conclusions put forth in the report by the Public Prosecutor which shall be remitted for reasons of brevity.” In that report, the prosecutor held that, “the simple reproduction of news provided for distribution by public authorities does not, even when false, cross beyond what is the regular exercise of the right to report, as the status of the source excuses the press from having to confirm the truth of the facts, and because prior confirmation of the news under these circumstances would limit this right, establishing a true restriction on the freedom of information. These are the circumstances in place in the case under adjudication.” In this regard, it recalled that based on the case law of that high court in the case of Campillay, “the journalistic medium is exempt from liability when it faithfully attributes a news item to a source - as happened in this case - given that the news therein ceases to be its own. In addition, it has found that when this standard is adopted, the origin of information becomes transparent, allowing readers to connect it not with the medium through which the information has been received, but with the specific source generating it. This is beneficial for those affected by the information, as their eventual complaints - if they believe they have a right to raise them - can be directed against those who truly issued the news item, and not against those who simply provided a channel for distribution.”<sup>108</sup>

119. The Third Criminal Chamber of the First Section of the Center of El Salvador followed a similar line of reasoning in a judgment dated July 22, 2011. In that ruling, the Chamber rejected a suit against three directors and a journalist of the newspaper La Prensa Gráfica for the crime of defamation [calumnia]. The suit had been brought by a member of the military named in a news item published on November 30, 2010. The Chamber found that there was no harmful intent in the publication and ruled that it was transmitting information from third parties. The case began when La Prensa Gráfica published that unidentified sources of the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) of the United States and the National Civilian Police of El Salvador had revealed the names of two soldiers - one on active duty and the other retired - being investigated for alleged connections with organized crime.

14. Case law on the liability of intermediaries on the Internet and the application of the principle of “mere conduit”

120. In their Joint Declaration on Freedom of Expression and the Internet (2011), the special rapporteurs for freedom of expression of the UN, the OSCE, the OAS and the African Commission rejected attempts by some States to hold actors considered to be intermediaries in the provision of

---

<sup>107</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice. Canavesi, Eduardo Joaquín et al. v. Diario 'El Día' Soc. Impr. Platense SACI on daños y perjuicios. Judgment of June 8, 2010. Case file C. 3548. XLII. Available at: http://www.csjn.gov.ar/expcn/documentoonCasefileoncons\_expe.jsp

<sup>108</sup> Republic of Argentina. Public Ministry, Attorney General of the Nation. Canavesi, Eduardo Joaquín et al. v. Diario 'El Día' Soc. Impr. Platense SACI on daños y perjuicios. Case file C. 3548. XLII. Decision of November 29, 2007.

Internet services liable for damaging or illegal Internet content.<sup>109</sup> This includes a broad range of actors who participate as intermediaries on the Internet - and provide services such as access to Internet connections, transmission, processing and routing of Internet traffic, storage of material published by third parties, and access to it, references to content or searches for information on the Internet, financial transactions and the facilitation of social networks. For the special rapporteurs, according to the mere conduit principle, "as long as they do not specifically intervene in that content or refuse to obey a court order to remove that content, where they have the capacity to do so", intermediaries must not be held responsible.<sup>110</sup>

121. With this logic, this Office of the Special Rapporteur recognizes the ruling handed down on October 19, 2010, by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Crookes v. Newton,<sup>111</sup> in which it analyzed whether an individual could be convicted for defamation for placing links on a website that lead to content that is defamatory (or allegedly defamatory) toward third parties. In its ruling, the Court found that a link or hyperlink can never in and of itself be seen as a publication of the content to which it makes reference. For this reason, the person who made it cannot in principle be sued for defamation. In this regard, it explained that a person who makes a hyperlink does not have control over the content referenced - that is, that person is only an intermediary.

122. To reach this conclusion, the Court was categorical on indicating that, "The Internet cannot, in short, provide access to information without hyperlinks." According to the Court, "limiting their usefulness by subjecting them to the traditional publication rule would have the effect of seriously restricting the flow of information and, as a result, freedom of expression". In this sense, it noted the potentially devastating chilling effect on the way in which the Internet functions, as the authors of articles would not risk possible repercussions by linking to other articles over whose content they have no control. For the Court, "given the core significance of the role of hyperlinking to the Internet, we risk impairing its whole functioning. Strict application of the publication rule in these circumstances would be like trying to fit a square archaic peg into the hexagonal hole of modernity."

15. Case law on the prohibition of prior censorship and the requirement of neutrality toward the content of expression or information

---

<sup>109</sup> The United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Opinion and Expression, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) Representative on Freedom of the Media, the Organization of American States (OAS) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (ACHPR) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and Access to Information. Joint Declaration on Freedom of Expression and the Internet. June 1, 2011. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/showarticle.asp?artID=849&IID=1>

<sup>110</sup> Article 2(a), of the Joint Declaration on Freedom of Expression and the Internet of the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Opinion and Expression, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) Representative on Freedom of the Media, the Organization of American States (OAS) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (ACHPR) Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and Access to Information. Joint Declaration on Freedom of Expression and the Internet. June 1, 2011. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/showarticle.asp?artID=849&IID=1>

<sup>111</sup> Canada. Supreme Court of Justice. Crookes v. Newton, 2011 SCC 47. Available at: <http://scc.lexum.org/decisia-scc-csv.scc-csv.scc-csv.en/item/7963/index.do>

123. This Office of the Special Rapporteur has explained that prior censorship takes place when the government takes prior measures to prevent the free circulation of information, ideas, opinions or news using any type of proceeding that gives the State control over expression or circulation of information - for example, by prohibiting publications or confiscating them, or by carrying out any other procedure oriented toward that same end.<sup>112</sup>

124. In this regard, Principle 5 of the Declaration of Principles establishes that, “[p]rior censorship, direct or indirect interference in or pressure exerted upon any expression, opinion or information transmitted through any means of oral, written, artistic, visual or electronic communication must be prohibited by law. Restrictions to the free circulation of ideas and opinions, as well as the arbitrary imposition of information and the imposition of obstacles to the free flow of information violate the right to freedom of expression;” and Principle 7 establishes that, “prior conditioning of expressions, such as truthfulness, timeliness or impartiality is incompatible with the right to freedom of expression recognized in international instruments.”

125. Likewise, in the case of “The Last Temptation of Christ “ (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile,<sup>113</sup> the Inter-American Court examined a prohibition imposed by the Chilean judicial authorities on the exhibition of the film “The Last Temptation of Christ” at the request of a group of citizens who had sought a remedy by invoking protection of the image of Jesus Christ, the Catholic Church, and their own rights. In highlighting some of the most important characteristics of freedom of expression - for example, its dual individual and collective dimensions and its critical democratic function, and recalling that this right protects both information that is positive, indifferent or inoffensive and information that is shocking, upsetting or offensive to the State or society - the Inter-American Court concluded that Chilean authorities had committed an act of prior censorship not compatible with Article 13 of the American Convention. The Tribunal noted that the violation of the American Convention had occurred not only due to the court rulings in question, but also due to the existence of an article in the Chilean Constitution setting forth a system of prior censorship for cinematic exhibition, thus conditioning the acts of all three branches of public power; it therefore ordered Chile to adapt its internal legal system to the Convention’s provisions.<sup>114</sup> The Court ruled similarly later on in its judgment in the case of Palamara Iribarne v. Chile.<sup>115</sup>

126. In this line of reasoning, in the aforementioned judgment dated April 30, 2009, the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil<sup>116</sup> found after examining the unconstitutionality of the Press Act passed during the military regime that the State cannot, through any of its agencies, define beforehand what can or cannot be said by journalists. Closely following inter-American case law and the scholarship

---

<sup>112</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Palamara Iribarne v. Chile. Judgment of November 22, 2005. Series C No. 135, para. 68.

<sup>113</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of “The Last Temptation of Christ” (Olmedo Bustos et al.) v. Chile. Judgment of February 5, 2001. Series C No. 73.

<sup>114</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Inter-American Legal Framework of the Right to Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II CIDH/RELE/INF. 2/09. December 30, 2009. Para 149. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonINTER-AMERICAN%20LEGAL%20FRAMEWORK%20OF%20THE%20RIGHT%20TO%20FREEDOM%20OF%20EXPRESSION%20FINAL%20PORTADA.pdf>

<sup>115</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Palamara Iribarne v. Chile. Judgment of November 22, 2005, Series C No. 135.

<sup>116</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Complaint of breach of fundamental precept 130 Federal District. April 30, 2009. Available at: <http://www.stf.jus.br/portal/inteiroTeor/obterInteiroTeor.asp?id=605411&idDocumento=&codigoClasse=776&numero=13>

of this Office of the Special Rapporteur, the Tribunal was emphatic in indicating that “freedom of the press cannot exist between or under the claws of censorship.” In this regard, it explained that “the law prohibits the establishment of “core journalism activity,” understood as time and content guidelines on expression of thought, information and creation understood broadly.”

127. This standard was reiterated in the previously-cited judgment of September 2, 2010.<sup>117</sup> In this important ruling, the Supreme Tribunal reiterated that the State cannot decide ahead of time what individuals or journalists can or cannot say. This duty of omission, which includes its own legislative activity, includes a prohibition on determination of the content of basic journalism activities (both the moment – during elections or not – when speech can be issued and its content and information). In this sense, it emphasized that “in general, by virtue of its relationship with the public interest, journalistic criticism is not susceptible to prior censorship.”

128. Likewise, in previously-cited judgment C-010-00,<sup>118</sup> the Constitutional Court of Colombia explained that “pursuant to the terms of the Inter-American Convention (sic) and constitutional law, prior censorship takes place when for any number of reasons; authorities prevent or seriously obstruct the issuing of a message or publication containing particular content. It is a measure of preventative control given that the broadcast or publication is subject to prior authorization from an authority. [...] This type of practice is strictly prohibited by the Inter-American Convention (sic) and by the Constitution.”

129. In the same way, in a ruling dated March 29, 2011,<sup>119</sup> the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Costa Rica reiterated the prohibition of prior censorship and found that prior censorship includes “every act that seeks a priori to censor or silence any demonstration, dissemination or communication of thought, ideas, opinions, beliefs, convictions or value judgments. Any prior condition, including requirements of the veracity, opportunity, or impartiality of information, will also be considered prior censorship.”

16. Case law on the prohibition of discriminatory placement of government advertising

130. Interpreting the American Convention, Principle 13 of the Declaration of Principles establishes that “[t]he exercise of power and the use of public funds by the state, the granting of customs duty privileges, the arbitrary and discriminatory placement of official advertising and government loans; the concession of radio and television broadcast frequencies, among others, with the intent to put pressure on and punish or reward and provide privileges to social communicators and communications media because of the opinions they express threaten freedom of expression, and must be explicitly prohibited by law. The means of communication have the right to carry out their role in an independent manner. Direct or indirect pressures exerted upon journalists or other social communicators to stifle the dissemination of information are incompatible with freedom of expression.”

131. Regarding this, this Office of the Special Rapporteur has indicated that arbitrary distribution of government advertising is an indirect mechanism of censorship. It is a form of pressure that acts to reward or punish and whose purpose is to place conditions on the editorial stance of a media outlet according to the wishes of the individual exercising the pressure.<sup>120</sup> In that sense, it has been

---

<sup>117</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Judgment of September 2, 2010. Precautionary Measure in Direct Action of Unconstitutionality ADI-4451. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=TP&docID=2613221> emphasized that regulation of the placement of government advertising must follow a series of principles as follows: (1) the establishment of special, clear and precise laws; (2) the use of government advertising for legitimate aims (to inform about public services offered and public policies implemented by the government and, in general, to disseminate information in the public interest); (3) the establishment of criteria for the allocation of government advertising, that is the States must establish procedures for the contracting and allocation of government advertising that reduce discretion and prevent suspicion of political favoritism in its distribution. Advertising funds must be allocated according to pre-established criteria that are clear, transparent, and objective; (4) adequate planning of the guidelines for placing government advertising; (5) the establishment of open, transparent and nondiscriminatory mechanisms for placing advertising; (6) the promotion of transparency and access to information on government advertising; (7) the establishment of external oversight of the allocation of government advertising; and (8) the promotion of media diversity and pluralism.<sup>121</sup>

<sup>118</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment C-010/00, of January 19, 2000. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2000/C-010-00.htm>

<sup>119</sup> Republic of Costa Rica. Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Amparo Remedy Res. Nº 2011004160. March 29, 2011. Available at: <http://sitios.poder-judicial.go.cr/salaconstitucional/Constitucion%20Politica/Judgmenton2011/11-004160.html>

<sup>120</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Principles on the Regulation of Government Advertising and Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.LV/II. CIDH/RELE/INF.6/12. March 7, 2011. Para. 10. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonADVERTISING%20PRINCIPLES%202012%2005%2007%20reduce.pdf>

132. One of the main local precedents on this issue was set in the case of Editorial Río Negro S.A. v. Provincia de Neuquén. A ruling in the case was handed down by the Supreme Court of Justice of Argentina in September of 2007.<sup>122</sup> The case has to do with a suit brought by the newspaper Río Negro against the province of Neuquén, whose government had suspended its advertising in that media outlet because the newspaper had published accusations of corruption. In its ruling, the Supreme Court found that if the State decides to place government advertising, it must do so based on two constitutional standards: “1) it cannot manipulate advertising, placing it and withdrawing it from certain media outlets [based on] discriminatory criteria; 2) it cannot use advertising as an indirect means of affecting freedom of expression.”

133. Citing the Office of the Special Rapporteur’s 2003 annual report, the Court found that “the State cannot arbitrarily assign advertising resources based on unreasonable standards,” and found that such arbitrary placement “is a kind of pressure that, far from preserving the integrity of public debate, puts it at risk, unjustly and indirectly affecting freedom of the press and the legitimate interest that newspaper Río Negro and its readers have in the performance of provincial political officials in the exercise of their functions.”

134. Later, in a judgment dated March 2, 2011, the Supreme Court of Justice reiterated the State’s obligation to adopt a government advertising policy with objective and nondiscriminatory standards, as set forth in the Editorial Río Negro (S.A.) ruling.<sup>123</sup> The judgment upheld a 2009 ruling of the National Chamber of Administrative Contentious Federal Appeals<sup>124</sup> that ordered the National State “to order government advertising to be distributed among the different publications” of Editorial Perfil and Diario Perfil, which had brought the amparo action against the Media Secretariat of the Leadership of the Cabinet of Ministers. This standard was reiterated in the judgment handed down on February 29, 2012, by federal Argentine judge Ernesto Marinelli.<sup>125</sup>

---

<sup>121</sup> IACHR, Office of the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression. Principles on the Regulation of Government Advertising and Freedom of Expression. OEA/Ser.L/V/II. CIDH/RELE/INF.6/12. March 7, 2011. Para. 33-82. Available at: <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/expression/doconpublicationonADVERTISING%20PRINCIPLES%202012%2005%2007%20reduce.pdf>

<sup>122</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice, Editorial Río Negro S.A. Judgment of September 5, 2007, considerando 11.e. Available at: <http://www.csjn.gov.ar/confal/ConsultaCompletaFallos.do?method=verDocumentos&id=632580>

<sup>123</sup> Republic of Argentina. Supreme Court of Justice, Editorial Perfil S.A. et al. v. E.N. —Jefatura Gabinete de Ministros— SMC on amparo ley 16.986. Judgment of March 2, 2011. Available at: <http://www.csjn.gov.ar/confal/ConsultaCompletaFallos.do?method=verDocumentos&id=3843>

<sup>124</sup> Chamber IV of the Chamber of Federal Contentious Administrative Law of Argentina resolved a claim presented by Editorial Perfil against the national government for having been excluded in the distribution of government advertising as a consequence of its critical editorial line. In this case, the judges of Chamber IV held that “[t]he government should avoid acts that intentionally or exclusively aim to limit the exercise of freedom of the press, as well as those that indirectly produce this result. That is to say, it is sufficient that the government action have this aim to constitute an alleged affection of this freedom. As a result, it is not necessary to cause the economic asphyxiation or bankruptcy of the newspaper.”

<sup>125</sup> Republic of Argentina. Judicial Branch of the Nation. Case File 18.639/06 Editorial Perfil S.A. et al. v. Jefatura de Gabinete de Ministros- SMC on Amparo Ley 16.986. Available at: http://www.perfil.com/doconfallo\_perfil\_2012.pdf

135. The second Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of Mexico ruled on a remedy of amparo and protection of guarantees filed by a radio broadcaster against the Secretary of Health over its refusal to place government advertising with the appellant.<sup>126</sup> With explicit references to inter-American standards on the issue of freedom of expression, the Court concluded that the refusal to place advertising was based on standards that do not meet the requirements of reasonableness and proportionality established in the Constitution and the American Convention. The Secretary of Health argued that the radio broadcaster did not have the characteristics necessary for disseminating the Secretary's activity, given its status as a community broadcaster and for supposedly not yet being in operation.

136. In a later judgment,<sup>127</sup> referring to facts of the same nature, the aforementioned court found that on privileging some media outlets over others "solely based on the general range (capacity) of their broadcasts and not on their real coverage of all regions or communities in the country, [it is possible] that the placement of government advertising may become discretionary and restrictive due to unequal and undue distribution; these measures could lead to reduced protection of the rights of other radio broadcasters; this, in turn, could lead to undue restrictions to the communication and circulation of ideas and opinions through the discriminatory placement of government advertising, given the absence of specialized legislation and transparent and measurable criteria for placing government advertising; in this sense, these measures of restriction prevent the full exercise of the right to expression and information. Based on these arguments, it is concluded that the aforementioned measures of restriction are lacking in constitutional reasonableness and proportionality."

17. Case law on requirement of membership in a professional organization or holding of an academic degree to exercise the profession

137. This issue was addressed in detail by the Inter-American Court in Advisory Opinion on Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism OC-5.<sup>128</sup> In that opinion, the Inter-American Court explained that because of its close relationship with freedom of expression, journalism "cannot be equated to a profession that is merely granting a service to the public through the application of some knowledge or training acquired in a university or through those who are enrolled in a certain professional "colegio." Thus, for the Court, reasons of public order that justify the requirement that other professionals be members of professional organizations cannot be invoked validly in the case of journalism because it would permanently limit - to the detriment of those not members of the professional association - the right to make full use of the rights that Article 13 of the American Convention recognizes for all individuals, "it would violate the basic principles of a democratic public order on which the Convention itself is based."

138. In this sense, Principle 6 of the Declaration of Principles expresses that, "[c]ompulsory membership or the requirements of a university degree for the practice of journalism constitute unlawful restrictions of freedom of expression."

139. In agreement with what the Inter-American Court found in Advisory Opinion OC 5/85, in a judgment dated August 24, 2010,<sup>129</sup> the Court of Constitutionality of Guatemala ruled on an action of amparo brought by the Constitutional Vice President of the Republic of Guatemala. The action sought the nullification of a court ruling rejecting a criminal complaint filed for defamation charges [calumnia, injuria y difamación] that held that these offenses were committed in an opinion column published in a newspaper.

---

<sup>126</sup> United States of Mexico. Second Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice. Amparo Appeal 248/2011, of 13 July 2011. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/11002480.002.doc>

<sup>127</sup> United States of Mexico. Supreme Court of Justice. August 24, 2011. Amparo Appeal 531-2011. Available at: <http://www2.scjn.gob.mx/juridica/engroseoncerradoonpublico/11005310.002.doc>

<sup>128</sup> I/A Court H.R. Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism (arts. 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights). Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985. Series A No. 5.

<sup>129</sup> Republic of Guatemala. Court of Constitutionality. Case file 863-2010 of 24-08-2010. Available at: <http://www.cc.gob.gt/documentosCV.ResolucionesIntPub/863-2010%2024-08-2010.pdf>

One of the arguments put forth by the plaintiff during the court proceeding was that the author of the column was not registered with the Professional Council of Humanities and that based on this, the proceeding provided for in the Thought Distribution Act did not apply; rather, the plaintiff argued, standard proceedings must be used.

140. In ruling the amparo action inadmissible, the Court held that one of the bases for its decision was that “on being a right inherent to persons, the freedom to express a thought does not require the possession of an academic degree in journalism in order to be exercised.”

141. Similarly, in a judgment dated June 17, 2009, the Supreme Federal Tribunal of Brazil ruled that the requirement to hold a journalism degree and for the professionals to register with the Ministry of Labor, as a condition for the exercise of the profession of journalist, was unconstitutional.<sup>130</sup> In its ruling, the Tribunal examined whether the requirement to hold a degree was an unjustified barrier to freedom of expression. In its analysis, it explicitly included Article 13 of the American Convention and the relevant scholarship of the organs that monitor compliance with that treaty, as well as the considerations put forth by the Office of the Special Rapporteur in the 2008 annual report.

142. The first issue that the Supreme Court addressed was the scope of Article 5.XIII of the Federal Constitution, which authorizes the legislature to establish requirements and regulations for the exercise of specific professions. On this point, the Supreme Court stressed that this reservation of legal authority is not absolute and, therefore, must be in keeping with proper standards of reasonableness and proportionality. Accordingly, the Supreme Court then questioned whether the requirement of a professional degree to engage in journalistic activity could be considered a reasonable and proportionate regulation in a democratic society. To answer this question, the Supreme Court used inter-American doctrine and case law expressly.

143. First, the Court sought to establish whether journalistic activity was related to or different from other professions that required a university degree in order to practice, such as medicine or law. The Supreme Court thus considered that journalism is a profession that is distinct from those others due to the fact that it is closely related to the exercise of freedom of expression. In this respect, journalism is “the very expression and dissemination of thought and information, in continuous, professional and remunerated form.” Therefore, journalism and freedom of expression are two activities that overlap due to their very nature and cannot be considered and treated separately.

144. Based on this interrelatedness, the Supreme Court held that, “the requirement of a university diploma for the practice of journalism or the professional development of the freedoms of expression and information is not authorized by the Constitution, as it is a restriction, an impediment, a true, flat-out suppression of the effective exercise of freedom of expression, which is prohibited expressly by Article 220(1) of the Constitution.” The Supreme Court found that the offending law did not pass the proportionality test, as it was a prior restriction on the exercise of the right to freedom of expression. According to the Supreme Court, any control of this type that interferes with access to journalistic activity is a prior control that constitutes real prior censorship of freedom of expression. Analogously, on examining the validity of the requirement that Brazilian musicians be members of a professional organization, the Supreme Federal Tribunal held in a judgment dated August 1, 2011, that as far as the manifestation of the right to freedom of expression, one should be able to exercise artistic expression without any censorship, and without requirements of licenses or permits.<sup>131</sup>

18. Case law on source confidentiality

---

<sup>130</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Judgment of June 17, 2009. Extraordinary Remedy 511.961 São Paulo. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=AC&docID=605643>

<sup>131</sup> Federative Republic of Brazil. Supreme Federal Tribunal. Judgment of August 1, 2011. Extraordinary Remedy 414.426 Santa Catarina. Available at: <http://redir.stf.jus.br/paginadorpub/paginador.jsp?docTP=AC&docID=628395>

145. In its interpretation of Article 13 of the American Convention, Principle 8 of the Declaration of Principles explicitly indicates that, “[e]very social communicator has the right to keep his/her source of information, notes, personal and professional archives confidential.”

146. In this regard, in judgment T-298/09 of April 23, 2009,<sup>132</sup> the Constitutional Court of Colombia ruled on an action of protection brought by a member of Congress requesting that an article published in the newspaper connecting him with acts of corruption based on an anonymous letter be corrected. With regard to the confidentiality of the source, the Court found that what is at issue is “a fundamental and necessary guarantee for the protection of true independence for journalists and for them to be able to exercise the profession and satisfy the right to information without any indirect limitations or threats that inhibit the distribution of information relevant for the public.” The Court based its statement on its case law, the Colombian Constitution, the Declaration of Principles on Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (Principle 8: “Every social communicator has the right to keep his/her source of information, notes, personal and professional archives confidential”), and on the interpretation that the court itself has performed of that Declaration. In conclusion, it indicated that “in principle, and as long as statutory legislation does not establish a clear, reasonable, necessary and proportional provision to the contrary, the confidentiality guaranteed by Article 74 of the Constitution is not subject to limitations. Any attempt to impose a restriction on that guarantee currently lacks the statutory legal support necessary.”

147. In reference to the conflict between the confidentiality of the source and the rights of third parties, the Court expressed that “in some circumstances, the confidentiality of a source is necessary even when it could compromise the rights of good-faith third parties. These are cases in which, without a guarantee of source confidentiality, information of great importance for society would remain unavailable. Effectively, especially in cases in which mafia or organized crime are involved, organizations that are not afraid to intimidate a source to keep him or her from revealing information that could affect their interests, source confidentiality becomes a priority guarantee necessary for brave and independent journalism to be able to carry out its work. In any case, it is true that journalists have important duties when publishing information that could incriminate third parties but that has been provided by a confidential source. In this sense, as the majority of pleadings received in this case have indicated that, in principle, ethical and professional rules require the media to offer to the public all the information that is available to them, except in special cases in which a source can be trusted and there are latent risks, and the information is relevant to the public. In these cases, greater diligence is required of journalists in the collection and assessment of information, although they cannot be required to reveal their sources.”

19. Case law on the obligation to guarantee the life and safety of journalists covering armed conflict and emergency or high-risk situations

148. In a judgment issued this year case of Veléz Restrepo and family v. Colombia, the Inter-American Court found that “States have the obligation to adopt special measures of prevention and protection for journalists subject to special risk owing to the exercise of their profession. Regarding the measures of protection, the Court underlines that States have the obligation to provide measures to protect the life and integrity of the journalists who face this special risk owing to factors such as the type of events they cover, the public interest of the information they disseminate, or the area they must go to in order to do their work, as well as to those who are the target of threats in relation to the dissemination of that information or for denouncing or promoting the investigation of violations that they suffered or of those they became aware of in the course of their work. The States must adopt the necessary measures of protection to avoid threats to the life and integrity of journalists under those conditions.”<sup>133</sup>

---

<sup>132</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-298/09 of April 23, 2009. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2009/T-298-09.htm>

<sup>133</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Vélez Restrepo and family v. Colombia. Preliminary Exceptions, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of September 3, 2012. Series C No. 248. para. 194.

149. In this sense, judgment T-1037/08 of October 23, 2008, of the Constitutional Court of Colombia,<sup>134</sup> ruled on an action for protection brought against the Ministry of the Interior and Justice by a Colombian journalist who investigates issues of human rights and armed conflict. The journalist had been subjected to threats, harassment, persecution and psychological torture because of her professional activities.

150. In this ruling, the Court found that the fact of publicly questioning risk studies or the danger of the situation or the feeling of fear of someone who is being threatened is not compatible with State obligations, as one of the State's special duties with regard to individuals facing situations of high or extraordinary risk is the recognition of the situation. In that sense, the State attitude "intended to ignore, hide, lie about, minimize, or justify the crimes committed" constituted an additional violation of the rights of those facing a situation of risk.

151. In these cases, the Court found, it is not possible to justify the authorities' discrediting of the situation of risk faced by the journalist, given that "the right to freedom of expression when exercised by public officials exercising their duties has greater limitations than when that right is exercised by a common citizen," as the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has also found.<sup>135</sup> The limited scope of freedom of expression for public officials exercising their duties will be addressed in greater detail in the following section.

152. In addition, the Court held first that in order to determine that the protection that should be provided to a journalist facing special or extraordinary risk be withdrawn, "a process must be carried out in which, at least, the minimum guarantees of due process are guaranteed." These guarantees, it stated, "must extend to all criminal and administrative areas in which the State exercises a legal authority to sanction - that is, whenever it can affect the rights of a person as a result of the actions or omissions of this person that violate or injure a right that is legally protected by the system."

153. Finally, the Court argued that "when what is at issue is a journalist who, despite threats, decides to continue his or her investigations, that person will likely require special provisions that take into account the totality of the rights involved. In particular, it is obvious that communicators may need a certain amount of privacy to be able to interview a confidential source or make certain inquiries. In these cases, it becomes necessary to make special allotments designed to guarantee both the journalist's safety, and his or her work and the important rights associated with freedom of expression. Specifically, the Court cannot fail to note that in these cases, not only is the right of all persons to free personal development at issue, but also the rights to freedom of expression and source confidentiality."

154. Based on the foregoing, the Court concluded that the mandate had been violated according to which "the Ministry is obliged to adopt whatever specific, adequate and sufficient measures are necessary to prevent the extraordinary risk that has been identified from resulting in harm and to implement those measures, also in a timely fashion and according to the circumstances of each case, such that the protection is effective."

20. Case law on the limited scope of freedom of expression for public officials exercising their duties

155. The organs of the system have recognized that the exercise freedom of expression by public officials has certain specific characteristics and connotations. Thus, when public officials exercise their freedom of expression, "they are subjected to certain limitations as far as confirming to a reasonable - although not necessarily exhaustive - degree the facts on which their opinions are based. They must do so with even greater diligence than necessary of private individuals based on the high degree of credibility they enjoy and in order to prevent citizens from receiving a manipulated version of the facts.”<sup>136</sup>

---

<sup>134</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-1037/08, of October 23, 2008. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2008/T-1037-08.htm>

<sup>135</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Apitz Barbera et al. ("First Court of Administrative Disputes") v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of August 5, 2008. Series C No. 182.

156. In this regard, this office has also specified that public officials have a duty to ensure that on exercising their freedom of expression, they are not causing a violation of fundamental rights; that their statements do not constitute arbitrary, direct or indirect interference with the rights of those who contribute to public debate through expression and dissemination of their thought; and that their statements do not interfere with the independence and autonomy of legal authorities.

157. In a similar tone, in judgment T-1191, of November 25, 2004,<sup>137</sup> the Constitutional Court of Colombia ruled on an action of protection filed by a group of nongovernmental organizations dedicated to the defense of human rights against the then-President of the Republic of that country. The action argued that his statements - in which he accused them of having connections to terrorist groups - were a violation of their rights to honor and good name, and their rights to promote and defend human rights, as well as to the rights of their members to physical safety and life. In its ruling, the Court explained that the “President of the Republic [holds] the power-duty to maintain permanent contact with citizens through his speeches and public appearances,” but that “this power-duty of the President differs substantially from simple freedom of expression recognized in general for citizens. In reality, it constitutes a legitimate means of exercising the governmental authority held by contemporary democracies.”

158. In this sense, it held that “the public statements of the President of the Republic are not absolutely free, and that (i) they must strictly respect parameters of objectivity and veracity when they are simply transmitting public information or data; (ii) they are more free when taking political positions, proposing governmental policies or responding to criticism from the opposition, but that even in these events, expression of the President must include a minimum of real factual justification and meet a basic standard of reasonableness, and (iii) in all cases, his communication with the Nation must contribute to the defense of the fundamental rights of persons, especially those deserving of special protection.” Regarding this latter aspect, the Constitutional Court expressed that “as with all authorities, the President holds a position as guarantor with regard to the fundamental rights of all inhabitants of his country’s territory. This means that when he addresses himself to citizens, he must refrain from issuing any declaration or statement that damages or puts at risk that category of rights.” The Court expressed that “this obligation [to refrain from making declarations that threaten fundamental rights] becomes more relevant when dealing with subjects who enjoy special constitutional protection such as human rights defenders, the reinserted, those displaced by violence, or members of peace communities.” In addition, it emphasized that the use of mass media generates “greater responsibility than what arises through the use of other non-mass communication systems.”

159. These standards were made to extend to other senior state authorities or public officials through judgments T-263/10<sup>138</sup> and T-627/12<sup>139</sup> issued later on by the Constitutional Court of Colombia. In this regard, in the judgment issued on August 12, 2012, after a review of its constitutional case law, as

---

<sup>136</sup> I/A Court H.R. Case of Apitz Barbera et al. (“First Court of Administrative Disputes”) v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of August 5, 2008. Series C No. 182. para. 131. See also, I/A Court H.R. Case of Ríos et al. v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 28, 2009. Series C No. 194, para. 139; Case of Perozo et al. v. Venezuela. Preliminary Exception, Merits, Reparations and Costs. Judgment of January 28, 2009. Series C No. 195, para. 151.

<sup>137</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-1191-04 of November 25, 2004. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2004/T-1191-04.htm> well as the case law of the Inter-American Court established in the cases of Perozo et al. and Ríos et al., both against Venezuela, the Constitutional Court of Colombia found that “the statements of senior public officials – whether national, local or departmental – on matters of general interest are not part of their right to freedom of expression or opinion but rather constitute a manner of exercising their duties through communication with the citizenry.”

<sup>138</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-263-10 of April 19, 2010. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2010/t-263-10.htm>

<sup>139</sup> Republic of Colombia. Constitutional Court. Judgment T-627-12 of August 12, 2012. Available at: <http://www.corteconstitucional.gov.co/relatoria/2012/t-627-12.htm>