The Latin American Botanical Network Raises Key Questions about Biodiversity Conservation, Thanks to FEMCIDI

Chile. During September 22 and 23, a panel of experts gathered to partake in the "Tyler Regional Workshop: Key Scientific Questions Relevant for Biodiversity Conservation in South America." The goal of the workshop was to discuss topics in the field of biodiversity conservation that need additional funding and to later inform governing bodies of the conservation issues that require more research. The workshop was produced in part from funding from OAS Partnership for Development Fund, FEMCIDI, as well as support from the Chilean Ministry of Environment and the University of Chile.

OAS Partnership for Development (FEMCIDI) Funds Online EMIS Project in Saint Kitts and Nevis

Saint Kitts and Nevis. On October 18 the Government of the Federation of St. Kitts and Nevis through its Ministry of Education and Information, launched its online education Management Information System. This national project is funded by the OAS through its Special Multilateral Fund of the Inter-American Council for Integral Development (FEMCIDI) with additional financial support from the Pan American Development Foundation (PADF). The project was designed to support educational reform efforts, particularly with regard to educational methods and curriculum development.
